I give and bequeath to The Century Association, the sum of $_____.

HISTORICAL

The Century was founded and its first Constitution adopted on January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association. Forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders; forty-six others joined during the year. The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, the Association was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended on March 29, 1883.

During its early years, The Century occupied rooms at 495 Broadway from the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849, at 435 Broome Street to the spring of 1850, and at 575 Broadway until May, 1852.

By this time, it required a house and moved to 24 Clinton Place (now 46 East Eighth Street). This was its home until the spring of 1857, when it made another move, to a house at 109 (old number 42) East Fifteenth Street. On January 10, 1891, it occupied its present Clubhouse at 7 West 43rd Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700; April 3, 1958, 800.

The lamp that burns at each meeting of The Century was designed in 1858 for The Column, a literary society founded in 1825. It was lighted at all subsequent meetings of The Column until Centurions John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, the only surviving members of that organization, presented it to The Century in 1901 as "a silver symbol intended to be a lasting memorial to The Column." They also presented to "all present and future members" of The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The minutes of their meeting concluded, "The Column then adjourned sine die." Today, more than one hundred years later, the lamp still burns.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

THE Board of Management submits the following report for the year 1961:

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON ART

COMMITTEE ON EXHIBITIONS

The program arranged by the Committee on Exhibitions brought the following to the Gallery during the year:

January 4–February 12: New Found Folk Art of the Young Republic; a selection of forty paintings from a large group of American primitives given to the New York State Historical Association by Stephen C. Clark

February 15–April 2: Murals, Water Colors, Sketches, and Drawings by Artist Members

April 5–May 28: Current and Retrospective Painting by Eugene Francis Savage

May 31–September 24: A Selection of Paintings from the Association's Own Collection

October 4–October 27: Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members

November 2–November 5: Murals Celebrating the Vintage Festival

November 8–January 14: Autumn Exhibition of Oil Paintings and Sculpture by Artist Members

In the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members, a jury of the Artist Members of The Century consisting of Louis Bouché, John C. Johansen, and E. Powis Jones selected nine works in various media to receive prizes of silver ash trays; four works were awarded Honorable Mention. The awards were presented to Alfred Bendiner, Walker O. Cain, John Frederick Harbeson, Samuel Eldon Homsey, Henry R. Mallory, Carl E. Newton, Bronson S. Ray, Leonard J. Robbins, and Whitney North Seymour, Jr. Honorable Mention went to Eric Gugler, Eldredge Snyder, Fritz B. Talbot, and Robert Worthington. Bermuda Chest by Bronson S. Ray received the award in the popular vote.

In the Autumn Exhibition of Oil Paintings and Sculpture by Artist Members, the Art Committee Medal was awarded to John F. Folinsbee for his oil painting Maine Coast Fog. Mr. Folinsbee is the first Centurion to receive this medal a second time. Honorable Mention was given to Peter Geoffrey Cook for his oil painting Seguin, to Thomas P. Blagden for his oil painting Appalachian Flight, and to Lewis Iselin for his bronze head Harvey Cushing. The largest popular vote was cast for The Visit, an oil painting by John Koch. This is the second successive year that Mr. Koch has received this honor. The jury of awards consisted of Walter C. Baker, Henry S. F. Cooper, and René d'Harnoncourt.

HOUSE-ART COMMITTEE

The Association was fortunate in receiving a handsome gift of furniture from the estate of John Van Etten Westfall. Most of these pieces are now in the Medal Room. Another gift was from Mrs. Charles Butler, who presented, in memory of her husband, a Dutch grandfather's clock which has been placed in the second floor hall. The clock it replaced is now in the Reception Room.

The large mirror in the Reception Room has been covered, and the bust of Elihu Root moved to the corner of this room. Aluminum chairs have been purchased for the rear porch.

The ten-year program of cleaning and restoring pictures has been initiated. Westover Manor by Henry and The Falls by Kensett have been finished and hung in the Reception Room. The Power of Music by Mount and Fishes by Terry are in the hands of the restorer.

The following works from the Association's collection were loaned during the year:

To the Corcoran Gallery of Art and Museum of Fine Arts, Boston: Guerilla Warfare by Albert Bierstadt.

To The Wilmington Society of The Fine Arts: Catskill Cove by Asher B. Durand, Asher B. Durand by Daniel Huntington, Coast Scene by John Kensett, Mt. Chocorua by John Kensett, Henry James by John La Farge.

Henry S. F. Cooper, Chairman, Committee on Art; Robert Beverly Hale, Chairman, Committee on Exhibitions; Lewis G. Adams, Chairman, House-Art Committee.

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

IT HAS been a concern of the Committee on Literature that the rarity and value of certain of the Association's possessions have necessitated their being kept in a fireproof vault in the basement where obviously they are not readily available to scholars and others interested in them. To improve this situation the Committee, with the approval of the Board of Management, has placed three items on loan in The New York Public Library at 42nd Street. These are:

Franklin, Benjamin. 15 A.L.S. to Francis Child, 1785–1790. Together with one A.L.S. by W. F. Franklin, 1790; one by Peter Freneau, 1795; and two by John Jay, 1783–1784.

Hearn, Lafcadio. Folio volume, bound in brown calf, in which are mounted about 30 A.L.S. (a few incomplete) by Lafcadio Hearn to Elwood Hendrick, 1890–1898; also one A.L.S. Horace Elisha Scudder to Lafcadio Hearn.

Poe, Edgar Allan. The Raven and other Tales. 2 vols. in one, original cloth, New York, 1845. With autograph corrections and additions by the author.

In this connection it is interesting to read some lines written on The Century Library by Henry James for the One Hundredth Anniversary volume. In referring to the posthumous gift “consisting of several thousand volumes, including rare books and manuscripts” of the James Lorimer Graham, Jr., collection, he said:

“Some of these items (for example, Benjamin Franklin manuscripts and a volume of Poe, with his emendations of some of the verses) are of such unique interest and great value that they are preserved under lock and key. Thus they are seldom seen and their existence is not known to many scholars. Their value is very substantial. Several members have asked whether the Club would not do more honor to these treasures and to Graham’s memory if it disposed of them to one of the great research libraries, subject perhaps to a stipulation that the Club might now and again borrow them back for a Century exhibition. But these suggestions appear not to have been seriously entertained.”

The Committee's recent action seems to be in the direction of a suggestion raised fifteen years ago.

For the calendar year 1961, the Library accessions totaled 568 books—451 by purchase, 117 by donation. Books and pamphlets with Century connections numbered 104. The Committee wishes to express its appreciation to those who have made donations to its shelves.

The Association subscribes at present to 73 periodicals (apart from local newspapers) and receives 9 others regularly as gifts.

William L. Savage, Chairman

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

THE House Committee was guided through the first half of the year by Francis W. Roudebush, so the present Committee has had the advantage of his most able leadership for a major portion of its recent work.

As usual, upkeep and repairs to the Clubhouse constituted a large part of the Committee's task. Besides the usual painting and cleaning, this included new doors to the terrace of the East Room and new flooring for the Billiard Room. Descending detritus from the building construction to the north created the need for considerable repairs to roofs and skylights. These, though a great annoyance to us, were kindly taken care of by our banking neighbor.

After the remodeling of this bank was finally completed, we again had the use for the summer of our shaded terrace off the East Room. Its popularity vied with the fully air-conditioned space in the West Room during the hot weather. To the west of us, the Princeton Club's excavation activities gave concern until structural engineers assured us that all was well and that soon there will be a handsome new addition to the enclave of clubs on West 43rd Street.

The expiring contract with the Labor Union was renegotiated, and a new agreement made for a period of three years. This will stabilize somewhat the basis for the Treasurer's planning for the future.

Mr. Galantière's extensive study of the cost of meals in other clubs and in some restaurants caused the Committee to make a few upward revisions in the price of our meals and drinks. This slightly reduces the red in the financial statement of the restaurant department.

The Monthly Dinners had an unusually interesting group of speakers. In January, Joseph Esrey Johnson gave us an absorbing account of the work of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, in his talk "Reflections of a Peacemonger"; in February, David E. Lilienthal told of his helping to bring new activity to parts of the Middle East, with his illustrated lecture "Leaves from a Persian Journal"; in March, Gilbert Highet represented the literary group by reporting on "The Art of Parody"; in April, Francis Whiting Hatch brought a breath of New England with his program of song and verse, "A Report from the Boston Chapter"; in May, James Johnson Sweeney discussed the various aspects of modern art, in his talk "Don't Look Now."

In June, as usual, the meeting celebrated the end of the spring season with only pleasant conversation and good food and drink.

The new members of the year were welcomed at their Dinner in October by President Paul Kieffer. He asked Edward Streeter to give them a careful account of the difficulties which they would encounter in just being members of The Century. The November meeting, by custom, was a Wine Festival, presided over by Henry Allen Moe and illuminated by many of our artist members. At the December meeting, we welcomed back from Washington Dwight D. Eisenhower, who told a capacity assembly of members of the international problems our nation has to face today.

Mr. Marchand and his well-trained staff are to be complimented on the smooth operation of the Club during both its normal and its extraordinary activities of the past year.

William Potter, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MUSIC

ON December 17, 1960, the men and boys of the Choir of St. Paul's Church in the Village of Flatbush, Charles Ennis conducting, gave a program which included some interesting Christmas music. A large audience stayed to enjoy the refreshments and to admire Mr. Marchand's egg-nog.

On January 28, 1961, the New York Sinfonietta under the direction of Max Goberman, gave a concert devoted to the music of Vivaldi and Corelli. The pieces performed called for various combinations of violins, cello, flute, oboe, bassoon, and harpsichord. The Gallery with its pleasing acoustics made a good setting for this distinguished ensemble.

On March 4, 1961, an unusual program of African dance and song was presented under the direction of M. Babatunde Olatunji. His well-trained group gave authentic demonstrations of the music of Africa with its traditional drum rhythms, folksongs, and dance patterns.

George Mead, Jr., Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON HONORS

Qualifications for Honorary Membership. The Committee submitted the following recommendation to the Board of Management, and it was unanimously approved by the Board:

Whereas it is difficult to lay down hard and fast rules as to qualifications for Honorary Membership, the Committee suggest that the following factors should be taken into consideration:

1. The candidate should be far along on the outward trail and have attained prominence in public life or in scholarship; or a career of high attainment in one of the learned professions, in literature or in the arts, leading to a position of acknowledged eminence.
2. He must have shown his devotion to the Century Association by taking an active part in its life; not necessarily by holding office or serving on committees, but by frequenting the Club and contributing to the pleasure of his fellow members by his presence.
3. His devotion to the Club should be such that he would really appreciate the high honor conferred on him.

Citation for Walter Francis Willcox. The Committee recommended to the Board of Management that an engrossed certificate be presented to Walter Francis Willcox on the one hundredth anniversary of his birth on March twenty-second, nineteen hundred sixty-one. Dr. Willcox, the second Centurion whose days have spanned a century in time, was elected to the Century in 1905. At its meeting on January 25, 1961, the Board adopted the recommendation by acclamation. The framed certificate was presented to Dr. Willcox at his home in Ithaca on his 100th birthday by his son, Centurion Bertram F. Willcox.

Gilmore D. Clarke, Chairman

GIFTS AND BEQUESTS

During 1961, the Association received the following substantial gifts:

- Bequest of George Arents: $10,000 “to be added to its endowment fund. This legacy is in honor of the many Centurions who have been my friends.”
- Bequest of William Tenney Brewster: $5,000.
- Final distribution of the one-tenth share of the remainder of a trust created by William J. Wilgus: $365.08.

OTHER MATTERS

Editor of the Century Bulletin. On the recommendation of the Secretary, the Board of Management at its May meeting created the position of Editor of the Century Bulletin, and authorized the President to make the appointment. President Kieffer persuaded Holger Lundbergh to serve, beginning in early 1962. Previously, the duties of the Bulletin's editor had been performed by the Secretary.

Assistant to the Historian. At its January meeting, the Board of Management authorized the President to appoint an Assistant to the Historian, and James Kellum Smith, Jr., was appointed. He will assist Roger Burlingame by assembling information that the Historian needs in order to prepare the Memorials to deceased Centurions, for publication in the Year-Books.

Exchange Privileges with The Travellers of Paris. For the past several years, The Travellers of Paris has granted the privileges of their Clubhouse to Centurions under an exchange arrangement with The Century. They have now found that they must discontinue exchange arrangements with all clubs. A Centurion may, however, secure a Guest Membership by being proposed by a member of The Travellers with whom he is acquainted. An up-to-date list of members of The Travellers is in the Secretary's office.

REQUIREMENTS OF
COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

PASSED MARCH 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the city of New-York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

§ 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a constitution and by-laws, rules and regulations, for the admission, suspension and expulsion of its members, and their government, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds, and from time to time to alter or repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules and regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this act shall constitute the trustees and managers until others are elected in their places.

§ 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real and personal estate; provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

§ 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

§ 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

§ 6. This act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the general Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

CONSTITUTION OF THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I

THIS Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II

§ 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

§ 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The First Vice-President, or in his absence the Second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

§ 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

§ 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem, to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

§ 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III

OF THE POWERS OF THE ASSOCIATION AT ITS GENERAL MEETINGS

§ 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

§ 2. No sale, lease, or mortgage of any of the real property of the Association shall be made unless the Board of Management shall authorize such transaction and report its action thereon to the members of the Association and unless, subsequent to the making of such report, such transaction shall be authorized by the concurring vote of at least two-thirds of the members present at a meeting of the members at which at least sixty members are present. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

ARTICLE IV

OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

§ 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

§ 2. The Board of Management shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from November to June inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

§ 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V

OF COMMITTEES AND THEIR DUTIES

§ 1. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 2. Other Committees. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI

OF THE MEMBERS

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding eight hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

§ 3. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absent members shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of members. In case the return of an absent member shall increase the number in his class of membership above the limit prescribed, no new member in that class shall be elected until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of voting and of holding office. [Amended April 3, 1947.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. Non-resident members may at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended February 1896.]

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

§ 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred fifty dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be seventy-five dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended April 2, 1959.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 11. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII

OF MEETINGS

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of November, December, February, March, April, May and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended June 3, 1941.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

OF AMENDMENTS

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee. A member may not introduce the same person as a daily guest more than twice in the calendar year, and may not introduce more than one daily guest on the same day.

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management.

A member may not obtain from the House Committee such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended May 6, 1954.]

(e) Guests to whom the privileges of the Association are extended under Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution or under paragraphs (a), (d), or (j) of this By-law are on the same footing as non-resident members, except that those to whom the privileges are extended under paragraphs (a) and (d) may not introduce visitors and except that no guest may be present at any business meeting of the Association. Nor shall the House Committee grant the same privileges to the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. [Amended March 5, 1959.]

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association. Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its last spring meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the November monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the November monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in November, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

HOUSE RULES

1. Admittance to the club-house cannot be claimed after one o'clock A.M.
2. There will be no breakfast on Sundays.
Week days, breakfast will start at eight o'clock in the morning.
3. Week days, the Dining Room will be closed at nine o'clock in the evening.
4. Sundays, a buffet will be served from one o'clock in the afternoon to eight-thirty o'clock in the evening, except that there will be no restaurant or bar service on Saturdays or Sundays during the summer season.
5. The Bar will be open from noon to midnight except on Sundays and holidays, when it will be open from one o'clock in the afternoon to nine o'clock in the evening.
6. Members will not be admitted inside the Bar at any time.
7. No game of billiards shall be commenced after twelve P.M. on Saturday nights, or after one A.M. on other nights.
8. The lights throughout the house shall be extinguished at two A.M.

LADIES IN THE CLUBHOUSE

Ladies invited by members of the Association may visit the Art Gallery from 10:00 A.M. to 7:00 P.M., either accompanied or unaccompanied by a member. As visitors to the Art Gallery, they may not pass to other parts of the Clubhouse.

Subject on each occasion to the approval of the Chairman of the House Committee or his designee, ladies may attend luncheon, afternoon, or dinner meetings of boards and other committees of non-profit organizations operating in the public interest, provided that such meetings are held in the Medal Room of the Clubhouse. Non-members of the Association attending such meetings may not pass to the upper floors of the Clubhouse.

On special occasions arranged by the Association for Centurions and their guests, such as concerts or literary afternoons, ladies may be permitted to visit the second floor of the Clubhouse.

Except as stated above, ladies may not be admitted to the rooms of the Clubhouse.

PUBLICITY

To avoid the possibility of involving the name of the Association in public controversy, members shall (1) refrain from using the name or the address of the Association in communications intended to be published or printed, (2) take all reasonable precautions to prevent public mention of meetings of any character that are held in the Clubhouse, and (3) assume responsibility for the exclusion from private rooms of reporters and news photographers on assignment.

BUSINESS CONFERENCES

Members discussing business in the Clubhouse are requested to confine such conferences as far as possible to the Association's private rooms. They should refrain from laying out business papers in the common rooms of the Clubhouse.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconders are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 3, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsive sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

THE CENTURY MEMORIALS

BY ROGER BURLINGAME

Historian of the ASSOCIATION

Donald Bradshaw Aldrich

Even when he was a bishop none of us in the Century who were lucky enough to know him ever called or thought of him as anything but Don. Never did the cloth set any barrier between Don and anyone at the Round or the Long Table; he was one of us everywhere, interested in all our interests, laughing at our stories, teasing those who stood in awe of his title. There was nothing pompous about Don Aldrich, or didactic, or pontifical; he despised artificial pioussness as he hated all sham or hypocrisy. Most of the time he did not even wear the uniform he was entitled to.

Two things are most remembered of Donald Aldrich: the impression he made on young men and his insistent belief that a church was not for services alone. Saint Paul's in Boston where he was its Assistant Dean became a magnet for Harvard undergraduates who wanted to hear sermons that were stimulating but not intoned. When he became Rector of the Church of the Ascension in New York, he decreed that the church doors should never be closed. A church, he said, must be a sanctuary for the perplexed—a protected escape for those who were tired of noise and haste and the complex cross-currents of city life.

It was said of Don Aldrich that he was "anima naturaliter centuriana” and that, next to family and faith, he loved the Century. Certainly he was there in all the spare moments of an exceedingly hard-working career, and many Centurions who did not know him saw and heard him as he led the services for Centurion friends who had gone to join the “Century’s Immortals.”

In 1917, when he was nineteen he graduated from Dartmouth College and went immediately into the Navy in which he served during America’s part in the First World War. In 1921, he graduated from the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge and was ordained a priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church. For five years he was Assistant to the Dean of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul in Boston; during these years he was also Chaplain of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts. He came to the Church of the Ascension in New York in 1925 and served there for twenty years with time out for the Second World War, in which he was a Navy chaplain.

His service as Bishop Coadjutor of Michigan, a post to which he was named at war’s end, was interrupted a year later by a coronary thrombosis. Although this forced him to give up his work in Michigan, the attack did not defeat him, and he spent eight more years as Dean of Chapel at Princeton. In some ways, this was as congenial and as useful as any work in his life for he was able to meet the problems of hundreds of students and to point the way to their futures.

Sometimes his fellow clergymen thought him too liberal to be orthodox. He refused to accept dogma, said he “had no theology,” and made what were considered by rigid adherents to traditional doctrine to be “incautious utterances.” He was contemptuous of much of the touted “self-help” and “peace-of-mind" advices that were dealt out by highly advertised ministers and felt that he could do far more than they for his fellow men by responding individually to their confidence in him. Talking to them quietly and alone he helped numberless people to help themselves.

"We shall miss him," said James Kennedy at the memorial service in the Church of the Ascension, "but we will never lose him."

William Goodwin Avirett

Bill Avirett "was one of those men who was always bigger than what he was doing at the moment." So says a Centurion friend of this teacher, writer, and editor. A review of his life shows that he was connected with some pretty big things; it suggests, too, that he left them bigger than he found them.

If there are any innate talents, that of attracting and holding the attention of a young person's elusive mind is surely one of them. No boy's thought wandered while Avirett was talking; further, he inspired boys to search for answers to their incessant queries down straight paths. They knew, too, that he was their friend, quick to respond to their intellectual interests; one they could depend upon and trust.

Like many distinguished Centurions, he went to Amherst. There he was president of the college's chapter of Phi Beta Kappa and editor of two undergraduate publications. He graduated, magna cum laude, in 1916. For a while, after graduation, he taught there, then moved to Deerfield Academy for boys where for seventeen years he was head of the history department.

In 1943, he became education editor of the New York Herald Tribune. A colleague says, "I often thought he must have suffered from the constriction of being tucked away in a newspaper office and with only a brick wall to look at, after the free world of teaching." This fellow-editor adds, however, that "for me he was a focus of enlightenment and quiet cheer." In the editorials he wrote for the paper, he won wide and respectful attention for his analyses of the shifting trends in education.

He left the Herald Tribune to become vice-president in charge of Public Relations at Colgate University. In 1952, he was appointed special assistant to the president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Retiring in 1960, he went to live at Lawrenceville, New Jersey, where he was visiting master of history at the boys' school there. It was there that he died in midsummer, 1961, soon after his appointment as dean of Foxcroft School for girls in Middlebury, Virginia.

William Avirett was president of the Society of Alumni of Amherst and trustee of Emma Willard School, Holyoke College, and Briarcliff College.

He was a devoted Centurian; his lively mind, intellectual curiosity and genial fellowship made him welcome in our clubhouse, where he always found many friends.

Chester Irving Barnard

Chester Barnard has been described by a colleague as an "egghead but also successful as a business executive. His mind and instincts ran more to studied reflection rather than what seemed to be the mundane problems of business." Anyone who has been associated with his career well knows that every business problem he tackled ceased to be "mundane" the instant Barnard laid hold of it. His interest was not in the superficial or even, primarily, in the practical aspect of a question but rather in the philosophy behind it. It was for this reason that his work was mainly concerned with long-range planning while the practical handling of immediate issues was done by lesser men.

There is room for reflection and philosophical inquiry in the field of communications which was his. It bristles with problems which are far less ponderable than those of common commerce or industry. In the course of Barnard's career, for example, scientific advance had a greater impact on communications than in almost any other realm. The liaison between it and the parallel commercial progress of the telephone enterprise in which Barnard moved required precisely his kind of mind. It needed an unconfined view of men and things, the unspecialized approach of a student of human and social as well as physical nature.

Chester Barnard was an amateur (in the Century's sense) of music; he was so accomplished a pianist that one friend believes he could have been as successful on the concert stage as he was in business had he given to it the same time and effort. Like his predecessors in telephone communication, Alexander Bell and Emile Berliner, music was his persistent hobby.

Born in Malden, Massachusetts, in 1886, Barnard was educated at the Mount Hermon School in Northfield and at Harvard. When he left college, in 1909, he worked in the statistical department of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. Six years later, he was the company's commercial engineer. In 1922, he became assistant vice-president and general manager of the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania. He had become vice-president in charge of operations by the time, in 1927, that he accepted presidency of the New Jersey Telephone Company.

His other interests took him to the Rockefeller Foundation as trustee, and he became its president in 1940. His term as president fitted between those of two Centurions, Raymond Fosdick and Dean Rusk. He also headed the foundation's General Education Board. In 1957, Mayor Wagner appointed him a member of the Board of Health, and he had much to do with the city's new health code.

He had been a Centurion for eleven years.

Louis Betts

To Centurions, the perfect monument to the skill, imagination, and technique of Louis Betts is at the north end of the East Room: of all our portraits, perhaps most admired by new members and guests and most loved by those who remember its subject, our late former president, Royal Cortissoz. Betts caught Royal in the genial mood so familiar to older Centurions—the mood in which he always addressed our meetings. If ever there was a “speaking” likeness, this is it.

The boldness of his painting contrasted oddly with his personal shyness. Only in the poolroom did he really seem at ease and at home: he had a passion for billiards, and he amused fellow-members by the sense of frustration the game gave him. He took a good many beatings there below and though he took them gracefully, applauding the best shots with sincere appreciation, it so irked him, privately, that he could not do better at his favorite sport that he went to a billiard “academy” and took lessons. Denizens of the poolroom say that he emerged from the course better but not good enough for the real Century experts.

Since 1915, a member of the National Academy of Design, Louis Betts won six of its awards. He also won the gold medal of the Allied Artists of America and the Norman Waite Harris prize of the Chicago Art Institute. His work has been shown in museums all over America, including the Corcoran and National Galleries of Washington. He was a former president of the Salmagundi Club and a vice-president of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

In his more than forty years in the Century he was a regular exhibitor in our gallery. In the winter of 1953-54, he had a one-man show there, and, in 1958, he was awarded the Art Committee Medal for the best work in the Artist Members' Autumn Show.

Harrison K. Bird

Because of the delay in obtaining material concerning this member, the Historian is obliged to postpone his memorial to a later Year-Book.

Francis Scott Bradford

Brad had definite views on art and expressed them vigorously without fear or favor. He was impatient of fakery and of half-baked activities in painting. He was extremely critical of fellow painters—including Centurions—but his complete sincerity disarmed many who would have been offended had they detected any hint of conceit or bombast.

His best work was in mural painting and mosaic design. A striking example is in the chapel of the cemetery at Cambridge, England, dedicated to American aviators who were killed. Here he designed the ceiling and apse in mosaics of mixed marble, stone, and glass. In his association with the Battle Monuments Commission, which chose him for the work, he was at first highly critical of what he believed was the Commission's conservatism and arbitrary rejection of modern art, but he ended by convincing its members of the rightness of his views.

Francis Scott Bradford was born in Appleton, Wisconsin, was graduated from Lawrence College there, and studied art at the National Academy of Design in New York. In 1923, he won the Academy's traveling scholarship and the Prix de Rome. In the 1930s, he was instructor at the National Academy, at Cooper Union, and at Yale's School of Fine Arts. In 1932, he won a national competition for twenty-five panels in the Milwaukee County Courthouse. He painted ten murals for the New York World's Fair in 1939. He had many commissions for murals in commercial buildings; these included the International Telephone and Telegraph Company, the Hooker Electrochemical Company, and the National City Bank in New York; the Lever Brothers Company in Cambridge, Massachusetts; and the Sheraton Hotel in Philadelphia.

For ten years he was a trustee of the American Academy in Rome and president of the Academy's alumni association. He was at one time vice-president of the Architectural League; associate of the National Academy of Design, and a member of the National Society of Mural Painters.

His mosaics included tympana for a porch of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington and, lately, a lobby decoration for the Philip Livingston Public School in Brooklyn.

He was a captain in the Chemical Warfare Service of the Army in the Second World War.

Bradford was twenty-seven years in the Century.

William Tenney Brewster

"I'm feeling awful tickled about something," wrote Edna St. Vincent Millay in a letter home from Barnard College. "It isn't that I have another poem accepted. . . . It just has to do with Barnard." She had just submitted a theme in verse to her English professor. Mr. Brewster, she explained, usually read the verse themes aloud to the class "with a gentle cynicism which would spoil even good verse. . . . If he takes a dislike to anything he delivers it accordingly." In this case, however: "He read it beautifully. I was never so astonished in my life. He had really got hold of something he liked and he was a changed man. He seemed to understand every bit of it. Nothing struck him funny. . . ."

This letter, published in the Ladies Home Journal in October, 1952, delighted "Billy" Brewster's many warm friends in the Century. It confirmed what they already suspected that the girls at Barnard hung on every word, watched every expression, responded to every inflection of voice of this beloved teacher. "I noticed," wrote Miss Millay, "that there wasn't even the twitch of a twinkle in his eye, and you may be sure I was watching for it."

Every Tuesday at lunch at the oval table in the southwest corner of the Century's dining room, the same group came, year after year, to meet with Billy Brewster, to be delighted by his wit and to know the rare experience of true conversation. And even those Centurions who did not know him were aware during lunch time Tuesdays that something special was happening at that table. For one thing, the tremendous exuberance of Leonard Bacon's laugh, which used to penetrate every corner of the clubhouse, told them that his special friend Brewster had made some arrestingly humorous comment. In the old days, William W. ("Beowulf") Lawrence, George Odell, Ashley Thorndike, Paul Reynolds, and Harry Lydenberg were also members of the Tuesday group.

William Brewster was born in 1870 and graduated from Harvard in 1892. He came to Barnard in 1894 and taught there for forty-nine years. He was appointed Professor in 1906; was Acting Dean from 1907 to 1910 and again from 1920 to 1923. He was Provost of the college from 1910 until 1923. He retired in 1943.

A friend and colleague says he "was a New England gentleman, an intellectual, a wit, a Harvard product of the exciting years of American humanism. His students will remember his marvellous memory. He could quote long scenes from Shakespeare. His own comic verse was the delight of the university department dinners. He was an excellent teacher of composition."

With his wife, a painter, Brewster traveled much in Europe. After her death, he collected her sketches and paintings and reproduced them (some in color) in two beautiful volumes which are cherished by his friends and hers.

He died at ninety-one after fifty-seven years in the Century.

Henry Irving Brock

Looking so small and frail that it seemed a strong wind might blow him away, Irving Brock was as tough in body as he was in mind, spirit, and will. On the threshold of eighty he was attacked by hoodlums in the vestibule of his apartment house and badly beaten. No sooner had he recovered from this than he was run over by a taxi. A few days after each of these incidents he was back at the Century talking humorously of what his friends thought were disasters. "What bothered me most," he said about his "mugging," "was that my nose bled over a brand new suit I had just bought."

A lifelong journalist whose feature stories in the New York Times were eagerly watched for and read by most Centurions, Irving was also an adroit horseman and a country gentleman, proud of his region and family and devoted to southern tradition. He was a Virginian of the old school, "unreconstructed," as we say, avowedly prejudiced against changes advocated in recent opinions of the Supreme Court. He never quite forgave Thomas Jefferson for declaring that "all men are created equal," and he resented the extremes to which democracy had been carried in the United States. At the same time, he often said of members of the Century's staff that they had more of the instincts of a gentleman than certain Centurions he refrained from naming.

Irving was part of the Century; he was of its very bone and structure. His presence was so familiar that, even now that he has left us, it cannot quite fade. One felt that along with all the friendships he had among us, he was a friend, too, of the ghosts of the past. He had gone deep into the lore of the older days and had found them also great.

Henry Irving Brock was born in Amherst, Virginia, in 1876, took his A.B. at Hampden-Sidney College in 1895 and his A.M. a year later. For several years he taught in Virginia high schools and at Chattanooga, Tennessee. It was at Chattanooga that he had his first experience in journalism when he worked as a part-time reporter for the Chattanooga Times. He came to New York in 1902 and started his long career on the New York Times.

That career was twice interrupted: once when, for five years from 1912, he edited the Saturday Magazine of the New York Evening Post; again during the First World War when he served with the air service which, then, was a branch of the Army Signal Corps. He was discharged with the rank of captain.

On the Times he helped edit the Sunday magazine and wrote many articles. Perhaps his most congenial task was in writing for the column "Topics of the Times," for there he could be gently satirical about the human race—always a target for his quiet irony. His book Meddlers was published during the prohibition era; in it he said what he thought about the supporters of sumptuary laws. "But," as a Times editorial said, "he loved more than he hated. . . . He loved life itself." In another book he expressed his affection for the city he worked in: the book was New York Is Like This. He thought New York was "the fullest of life of all the cities in the world."

In his last year, he spent much time in Virginia. It was there, at Fredericksburg, that he died. He had been with us thirty years.

Samuel Pearce Browning, Jr.

Apart from family and personal attachments, Pearce Browning's dominating loyalties were to Princeton and New Canaan, Connecticut, where he lived for many years. He combined these in his service as president of the Princeton Club of New Canaan. He was also onetime president of the New Canaan Historical Society and a member of the New Canaan Bird Protective Society.

Browning was born in Maysville, Kentucky, and educated at Maysville High School, Mercersburg Academy, and Princeton. From Princeton he graduated with highest honors in English and History in 1922 and consequent election to Phi Beta Kappa. Three years later, he took his law degree at Harvard Law School. Later, when he became deeply interested in legal education, he was instrumental in establishing the school's fund-raising program and was national chairman of the Harvard Law School Fund. He served, too, as a member of the Committee of Five of the Council of the Harvard Law School Association.

He began practice with the firm of Sullivan and Cromwell in New York and became one of its partners in 1934. His first interest was in international law. When the First National Bank of Boston undertook to finance Argentina's first public bond issue, he was its representative. Later, his activities covered a wide field; he represented public utilities before the Securities and Exchange Commission as well as in state and federal courts. He took, too, great interest in questions of ethics in the law and was a member of the Committee on Professional Ethics of the New York County Lawyers Association.

During the Second World War, he served on a New York City local draft board. In 1956, he was named Director of the Park Association of the City of New York.

Pearce Browning's membership in the Century was unhappily brief. His premature death took him away from us only five years after his election.

Harold B. Butler

An Englishman who spent much time in the United States, Sir Harold rendered distinguished service to this country. His first interest was in the International Labor Organization which he sponsored from its beginning. An official of the Ministry of Labor in 1919, he was instrumental in the creation of what was known as the "labor charter" in the Treaty of Versailles. From this emerged the I.L.O. of which he was deputy director, then director. He was responsible for bringing the United States into the organization.

On the eve of the Second World War, he was appointed warden of Nuffield College of Oxford, but he gave up this post in order to head the British Information Service in Washington, D.C., thus giving Americans an understanding of the British War effort.

Sir Harold was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford. He entered the civil service and, in 1917, the Ministry of Labor. After the peace conference, he spent eighteen years in the International Labor Office at Geneva, becoming its director after the death of Albert Thomas, its first chief. In this time, the I.L.O. drafted the International Labor Code. Butler made a yearly analysis of social and economic conditions throughout the world and presented this each year in his annual report.

He was knighted in 1946.

He was elected to the Century in 1943.

Henry Seidel Canby

The decade of the 1920s was, perhaps, the greatest, certainly the most articulate and prolific span in the history of American literature. In it, the nation, for the first time, became fully conscious of itself; fully aware of its peculiar culture—separate and unique. It was the sudden energetic expression, in creative writing, of this awareness, that confirmed Henry Canby's lifelong conviction about our great indigenous potential in both the substance and the method of writing. In the 1920s, the change from the earlier borrowing and imitation, the presentation of foreign scenes or transplanted manners that had characterized so much of our earlier literature struck him like a fresh west wind and he became, in the editorial chair he had just acquired, one of its leading champions and critics.

The chair was in the offices of a new literary magazine; one that had arrived, fortuitously, parallel with the trend. The Saturday Review of Literature had emerged from a literary supplement to the New York Evening Post which when the Post went down in financial defeat the group of its editors had salvaged and, with the aid of an angel or two, had turned into an independent magazine serving the cause of American literature as it had never before been served. The group included William Rose Benét, Christopher Morley, and Amy Loveman; but Henry was the mastermind and through his administrative ability plus his wide acquaintance among American writers and his familiarity with the best writing brought the Review abreast of its stirring times.

Apart from his work on the Evening Post, Henry had a rich background for his task. As a teacher at Yale, he followed along in the Billy Phelps tradition—enthusiastic, tolerant, popular. Primarily he was a teacher rather than a scholar; his impulse was always to impart what he learned from his reading rather than to cherish it as acquired knowledge. To him criticism could be, and the best of it was, creative: this he practiced in his teaching, his writing, and his editing.

"Perhaps," wrote Centurion Allan Nevins in appraising Henry's work on the Review, "he did not have the passion for research and synthesis that marks the born historian; perhaps he lacked the intellectual subtlety of a More. But he did have the gifts of an admirable editor, and the thoroughness with which he had steeped himself in the intellectual past of the country gave him an indispensable part of his editorial equipment."

Henry Canby was born in Wilmington, Delaware, in 1878. His ancestry was Quaker, and Henry got his first education in a Quaker school. He graduated from Yale in 1899 having earned in three years a degree as bachelor of philosophy. Six years later, he won his doctorate and afterwards not only taught but organized methods of teaching in English at Yale. In the First World War, he served in the British Committee of War Information.

From 1924 to 1936, he edited the Saturday Review of Literature and thereafter served as chairman of its editorial board. Meanwhile, however, he became editor-in-chief of the Book-of-the-Month Club. Purists among his colleagues thought it a pity that he thus allied himself with a commercial venture, but in fact he was admirably adapted to the post. He had a flair for the popular in writing as well as sound judgment of literary values. Here again, he felt that he was teaching, educating the American people in the best American books; raising, in the country, the level of culture. In the Book-of-the-Month, he not only exerted important influence on its selections but he also picked its editorial staff. The selections of the club under his aegis were happily received by its large membership, but they were never the choices a pedant would have made.

In the Second World War, he went overseas for the United States Office of War Information. After the war, he was associated with Allan Nevins in promoting the idea of a popular magazine of history—spadework which came to fruition with the publication of American Heritage. He collaborated, also, in a three-volume Literary History of the United States. Before this, he had produced some seven critical or biographical books including an autobiography.

With all his gifts, Henry Canby was simple in his manner and talk, wholly unassuming, kind, friendly, above all an extrovert. He gave far more than he took, he was eager to help any deserving beginner in writing or scholarship.

He was devoted to the Century and was with us much. In the last years of his life, when a long, progressive illness kept him away, he was sadly missed. His membership lasted for nearly forty years.

Bradley Lancaster Coley

At nine, Bradley Coley decided to be a doctor. It was customary for his father, Dr. William B. Coley, to take the boy along on his visits in Sharon, Connecticut. On one of these, the father treated an abscess caused by a pitchfork wound; as Bradley watched his father expertly incise and drain the abscess, he made up his mind.

Bradley Coley inherited his passionate attachment to New England. His father came from Westport, Connecticut, a part of which is still called Coleytown in honor of the family. By the time Bradley was born, the Coleys had acquired their summer home in Sharon; there the boy spent his happiest times, and it was to Sharon that he went, all through his life, for relaxed weekends and his favorite recreations of hunting, fishing, and tennis.

He was born in New York City, two days before Christmas, in 1892. His secondary education was at the Hill School in Pottstown, Pennsylvania, and he was in the class of 1915 at Yale. Four years later, he took his doctor's degree at the College of Physicians and Surgeons. He interned at St. Luke's Hospital and finished as House Surgeon there in 1921. He was then clinical assistant at the Hospital of the Ruptured and Crippled and at the same time joined the staff of Memorial Hospital in the same capacity.

His choice of bone tumors as a specialty was a real challenge, for it was in this field that his father had attained his greatest renown. Bradley met this, however, because of his constant, intense interest in his father's work and won equal distinction in the specialty. His books Neoplasms of Bone and Tumors of Bone—a Roentgenographic Atlas have become standard in the field.

He was a member of the American Surgical Association, the Eastern Surgical Society, the James Ewing Society (and was awarded the James Ewing Society Medal in 1958), the Southern Surgical Association, the American Radium Society, and the New York Surgical Society. In 1959, he gave the Moynihan Lecture to the Royal College of Surgeons in England.

He was Professor of Surgery in Cornell, New York University, and New York Medical Colleges. He was Attending Surgeon and Chief of the Bone Tumor Service at Memorial Hospital and on the Attending Staff at Bellevue, University Hospital, Lincoln Hospital, Flower and Fifth Avenue Hospital, the Hospital for Ruptured and Crippled (now Hospital for Special Surgery), and Consulting Surgeon to the New York Infirmary, the Mary McClellan Hospital, Cambridge, Mass., Pitkin Memorial Hospital, Neptune, New Jersey, and Monmouth Memorial Hospital, Long Beach, New Jersey. In 1948, he instigated the founding of the Amputees Alliance to benefit amputees and those contemplating amputation. For more than twenty-five years, he was Chief Surgeon of the New York Central Railroad, and, throughout the Second World War, was Surgical Consultant to the Army serving in Texas and the Philippines.

A Centurion colleague writes:

“Dr. Coley was dedicated to human compassion and the achievement of perfection in surgery. The patient and his problem were his prime consideration but of next importance was his ingrained desire to pass on his knowledge to others and was thus always a great teacher.”

Bradley Coley has been a Centurion since 1949.

Raymond Dennett

In a life that was unfortunately far too short, Ray Dennett achieved much that was international in scope. In late years, his interest focused on the American Scandinavian Foundation of which he became President in 1956. Here he endeared himself especially to the government of Finland by his efforts to arrange for Finnish inclusion in all the activities of the Foundation. In recognition of this, he was decorated by the Finnish government in 1960.

Raymond Dennett was the son of Centurion Tyler Dennett, President of Williams College and a winner of the Pulitzer Prize for History. He thus came naturally by his intellectual interests and his ability as a teacher and lecturer. He graduated from Harvard magna cum laude in 1936; Harvard gave him an A.M. three years later. Until 1943, he was graduate secretary of Phillips Brooks House at Harvard. After the establishment of the United Nations, he served on the staff of its Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. In 1945, he became director of the World Peace Foundation and, in 1954, Director of the American Scandinavian Foundation.

Dennett taught International Relations at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and International Politics at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. He was also visiting lecturer in Government at Harvard, Columbia, and Brown Universities. He was on the board of editors of "Documents on American Foreign Policy," and he wrote many articles on international relations.

It has been said that few men fear death but many are afraid of dying. A long drawn-out approach to the end with physical and mental suffering is generally dreaded and often not bravely faced. Ray Dennett was an exception to the rule. He knew of his cancer long before it killed him. Calmly, he made arrangements for his family, moving them to Boston where he knew his wife would find friends and work after his death. He could even joke about the fatal disease. Once, near the end, when he was at the Century in a wheel chair, he rebuked a fellow-member for smoking too much. "You'll get cancer," he said, and laughed.

He was known for his robust humor and his booming voice. His friends were much attached to him; his courage was universally known, admired, and envied. He died at forty-eight—the age at which most of us are first elected to the Century.

Gayer Gardner Dominick

The week before he died, Gayer Dominick flew to Florida just to spend the night with an old friend who was deeply depressed by the illness of his wife. He knew that such a visit would thrill and cheer his friend. This was characteristic. It was the sort of thing he did all through his life—never as a gesture but in a spirit of sincere friendliness.

Businessmen who become Centurions must have qualities and interests that have nothing to do with business success. To us, such success is incidental and unimportant. That is why so many of our “amateurs” are Centurions in every sense: lovers of the arts and books who can think and talk intelligently about them; who are, above all, good companions. Creators in the arts and writing need such companions, and our club, dedicated as it is to paint and clay and print, would be single-tracked and monotonous without them. Gayer Dominick was such a one.

Dominick went to Yale from St. Paul's School and graduated from college in 1909. His classmates remember that he was voted not only the handsomest but also the most thorough gentleman of his class, “and he remained that to his friends,” writes one, “all his life.” On graduating, he entered the family investment firm of Dominick and Dominick—of which he later became a senior partner. In time out from business, he served in the Navy in the First World War and was a lieutenant, senior grade, on his discharge.

In 1935, he was elected a governor of the New York

Stock Exchange, and, during the hearings of the Securities and Exchange Commission, he served on the "Committee of Five" which selected the first paid president of the Stock Exchange. He later became consultant in the Office of Price Administration in Washington, D.C. He was director of many corporations; as trustee, he was especially interested in New York's Roosevelt Hospital.

He was a Centurion for seventeen years.

Walter Louis Dorn

"I liked him immensely," says a Centurion friend of Walter Dorn, "for his dislikes . . . he knew what it was to be made to feel that a man without a television is a man without a country." In a paper read to a meeting of Columbia's Faculty of Political Science, Dorn is described as "a good European and all the better American for that. Far better than most Americans, he saw that this country had grown and flowered out of the Europe of the 18th Century; he did not simply know this; he felt it and he lived it. . . . There is no hope of understanding Walter Dorn in any other terms than these."

He came, however, not from some Atlantic community whose cultural stream is supposed to contain much foreign salt but from the more purely American midwest, and there much of his early life was spent. He graduated from Concordia College in River Forest, Illinois. He took a Bachelor of Divinity degree from Concordia Theological Seminary and a Ph.D. in history at the University of Chicago. While instructor there in the 1920s, he demonstrated his freedom from any dogma he might have acquired from his theological training by joining with other members of the faculty in publicly defending agnostics and atheists who were under attack.

In 1929, he became assistant professor of history at the University of Wisconsin, and, in 1931, he was appointed full professor at Ohio State University. His first teaching in the East came just before the Second World War when, for a year, he was Visiting Professor of History at Columbia. For most of the 1940s he was in government wartime service.

He began as coordinator of information in the research and analysis division of the Office of Strategic Services; he then became chief of the Central European Branch of OSS, and instructor and adviser of the European Civil Affairs Division. After the war was over, he remained in service as consultant to the office of Military Government in Germany. In 1946, he was special adviser to General Lucius Clay, United States Military Governor in Germany on "denazification." The following year he returned to the teaching of history at Ohio State University.

Walter Dorn came to Columbia in 1956. His work there was much concerned with German affairs and the history of Prussia in the eighteenth century. His most popular course there was on historiography. Speaking of this, a friend has said:

"Dorn felt that the work of every historian was bound to embody, consciously or unconsciously, that historian's philosophy of history—his conception of the place and destiny of man in the universe."

We are sorry that Walter Dorn was not with us longer; his teaching and government work kept him away from New York till he joined the Columbia faculty, and he became a Centurion only in 1957. In the few years that were left to him then, he became devoted to the Century.

William Howard Doughty, Junior

For several years after his retirement from the faculty of Williams College, William Doughty was a familiar figure at our round table at lunch time and in the pool room where his fondness for billiards replaced his earlier playing of baseball and golf. He had many friends here—some of them his former students whom he had impressed with his understanding of American Constitutional History and his clear interpretation of it. One Centurion remembers that, when he was an undergraduate, Doughty's presentation of the Federalist Papers was so rewarding that he reread them once a year for many years after he graduated.

Doughty's own undergraduate career at Williams ended in 1898 after which he studied law—an excellent preparation for his teaching. He gave that up to accept an appointment in the Political Science Department of his alma mater. There he took an active interest in undergraduate life and was a kindly host to many students and a warm friend. Like several other Williams men among Centurions, he was a devoted member of his fraternity, Kappa Alpha. He was elected to the Century more than twenty years ago.

John Irving Downey

In these days when the use of large expense accounts and tax deductions for entertainment are automatic exercises among businessmen, it is refreshing to come upon one so quixotic as to have no truck with them. A colleague of John Downey's writes:

"Coming back from a large business luncheon one day he told me that he had never charged a business expense to his company and never would, and that he never deducted it from his income tax. He didn't think it was right—why, I don't know, but when John Downey decided something was not right then it wasn't right and that was that."

In many ways, Downey was an old-fashioned gentleman, formal, punctilious, reserved. He watched the world go by him—with regret. Brought up in a comfortable, leisurely New York in which ladies and gentlemen were waited on by beautifully trained servants, he never adjusted to the new city after the wars. The backslapping, first-name-calling business world of today was uncongenial to him; when he would attend a luncheon or other meeting of men in his business, he could not talk the new language but spoke in the measured and precise words to which he had been educated. When he addressed no matter what gathering, he never talked down to his audience, and they respected him for it. He was uncompromising in his integrity; John Downey was all of a piece, never to be diverted from his absolute standards, regardless of the environment in which he might find himself.

Downey took his Bachelor of Philosophy degree at Yale in 1897. On graduation, his work was in building construction and that was his main occupation for thirty years. In 1913, he became president of his own corporation. By 1927, he had acquired an interest in banking, the business which developed into his later life work. Until 1941, he was vice president and director of Bankers Trust Company. He was then president of The Fifth Avenue Bank; when it merged with the Bank of New York, he became vice-chairman of the board and trustee. He has been a director of many banks and other corporations.

He was much interested in civic affairs—particularly hospitals. He has been on the board of Presbyterian Hospital, and he was chairman of the campaign that raised more than a million dollars in aid of the Babies Hospital at the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center.

He became a Centurion in 1945.

Phillips Packer Elliott

At the time of his ordination, the "literalists" were in control of the national leadership of the Presbyterian church and the gates of many Presbyteries were barred to candidates as liberal in his ideas as Phillips Elliott. But under the sponsorship of the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Mt. Vernon, he was ordained by the Presbytery of Westchester. He continued in his convictions which differed from other preachers and pastors in his church, but he was tolerant, too, of their views and encouraged discussion.

It was as a pastor that he was especially distinguished, and he will be remembered for his help to those in trouble. To his parishioners, he was always accessible; consistently, his church office door was open, and he made constant calls—often at a hospital where one of his flock was ill.

His experience covered a wide territory. Born in Lyons, Kansas, the son of a Presbyterian minister, he went, as a boy, to regions as far apart as the Canal Zone and Oregon with his father. He graduated from the University of Michigan in 1922 and then spent three years at the Union Theological Seminary in New York. He took his Bachelor of Divinity degree there, magna cum laude.

He studied for a time at Mansfield College, Oxford; then, for two years, served as New England student secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. His first call after he was ordained was to the First Presbyterian Church of New York where he was associate minister. In 1932, he went to the First Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn.

With the Board of Foreign Missions of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., he visited Thailand, India, West Africa, and the Philippines in 1941. In 1947, he was invited by the government of Yugoslavia to study and report on religious freedom there.

For three years, he was president of the Protestant Council of the City of New York. He was, for a long time, a leader in the ecumenical movement.

He found time to come to the Century monthly meetings—if not to the dinners, at least to the addresses or talks later in the evening. He often took part in discussions at the long table.

He faced the long illness which caused his premature death at the age of sixty with unbroken courage.

John Berton Ferguson

John Ferguson was closely identified with Hagerstown, Maryland, where he was a leader of the community. He is described by his fellow townsmen as “a tower of strength in the civic and business life” of the city. He was president of its Chamber of Commerce for a decade and was chairman of the Washington County Committee for Economic Development.

Hagerstown was Ferguson’s adopted, not his native, city. He was born in Woburn, Massachusetts. His secondary education was in the public schools of Woburn, and he took his B.S. in Civil Engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. His first job was as division engineer with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad. From that he went to the Pennsylvania Railroad as assistant superintendent; later he was roadway engineer for the Ohio Electric Railway.

These were steps toward his private engineering practice. As head of the firm of J. B. Ferguson and Company, he was mainly concerned with design and construction, and many of the larger buildings of Hagerstown owed their creation to his firm.

In the First World War, Ferguson and his colleagues turned their attention to camps and proving grounds on the Virginia Peninsula, all very large projects. In the Second World War, his firm was architect-engineer for the Richmond airfield that was used by the Army Air Force.

Like many engineers, he loved the open; his outdoor hobbies were boy scouts and archery.

He was a life member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, a member of the Society of American Military Engineers and of the English Newcomen Society. He was formerly a member of the Maryland Geological Survey Commission, a director of the North American Cement Corporation and a director of the Western Maryland Railway Company.

He was elected to the Century in 1946.

Horace Rowan Gaither, Jr.

Celebrated because it was so mysterious was the Gaither report on the nation's defense adequacy, presented to President Eisenhower in 1957. Its existence was known but not its content; it was classified as "Top Secret" and neither the Republican nor the Democratic administration has seen fit to make it public—a stand which has stirred a good deal of controversy. There was criticism of this policy though it was defended on grounds of security.

But there was nothing mysterious about the man for whom the report was named. He was a lawyer who understood scientific research and engineering development. It was a combination of legal background and administrative sagacity plus this grasp of technical fundamentals that placed him in major policy roles. He had, too, the rare capacity not only of evaluating the achievements of scientists and engineers but of interpreting them to laymen—military men, in particular. Yet with all this he had the charm that springs from good fellowship and enjoyment of life.

Rowan Gaither, Junior, was born in Natchez, Mississippi, in 1909, took his A.B. at the University of California when he was twenty and his LL.B four years later in 1933. That same year he was admitted to the California bar. His first job was as assistant to general counsel of the Farm Credit Administration, a post he served for three years. From 1936 until the United States entered the war, he was a partner in the San Francisco law firm of Cooley, Crowley and Gaither and a lecturer in the University of California School of Law. In 1942, he was appointed assistant director of the Radiation Laboratory at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and, in the same year, he became consultant to the National Research Commission. In 1948, he was named chairman of the board of the Rand Corporation, which does scientific research for the government. The following year the Ford Foundation made him its Director of Study from which post he moved to associate director of the Foundation and eventually became its president.

Gaither was a trustee of the American Heritage Foundation, a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and of the American and California Bar Associations and the recipient of the Presidential Certificate of Merit for services to the government.

Of the celebrated Gaither report, he is quoted as saying:

"I believe it will remain a secret until it is obsolete, then it will be no longer news."

The death of a person of such accomplishment and potential at the early age of fifty-one marks a loss we share with the nation.

Frederick Augustus Godley

For six years Master of Timothy Dwight College at Yale, Fred Godley was distinguished by his hospitality and by the value of his advice to both students and faculty members. "Fred was ever ready to advise us all," writes a Yale colleague, "in the most kindly and realistically practical manner on almost any topic: a proposed wedding, the proportion of one's salary to allot to rent, disciplining students, handling faculty prima donnas. This same generosity of spirit made him an ideal college master. No trouble was too great for him, he spent much of his time looking after the affairs of his friends' widows and orphans."

Architecture was Godley's subject, and his teaching at Yale was based on a sound foundation of practice. Before he joined the faculty, he had worked with Guy Lowell and had been a partner in three architectural firms, the last of which, Hood, Godley and Ferguson, had, among its achievements, some of the most interesting business buildings in New York—Daily News and McGraw-Hill—and the du Pont building in Wilmington.

Godley was born in Jersey City in 1886, educated at Hotchkiss School, Yale, M.I.T., and the Ecole des Beaux Arts. He began his practice in 1913. In 1916, he served with Squadron A on the Mexican border. During the First World War, he was with the United States Housing Corporation. He was a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects and chairman of the educational committee of the Beaux Arts Institute of Design.

Before joining the Yale faculty, he lived in Rye, New York, and was interested there in the town's planning and zoning boards. He was also president of the board of trustees of the Rye Presbyterian Church.

His friends, among whom are many Centurions, remember his hospitality at his home in Rye and, especially, in the beautiful Van Rensselaer manor house in Morris, Otsego County, New York, into which he and his family moved after his retirement. There, through the summer months, moved a steady stream of friends.

At the Long Table, he was for many years a familiar figure. He was a Centurion for thirty years, and we shall long remember him.

Harold Kleinert Guinzburg

The word "creative" has been overtaxed and has come to mean anything that one wants it to mean. Purists may say that it means only gifted in the arts of painting, writing, sculpture, music, and design in architecture. To call a publisher "creative" might seem to use terms that contradict each other. What then shall we call Harold Guinzburg? There are authors who, perhaps, could not have created without him. He created ideas for them: gave out of one of the most fertile minds in all modern publishing, the spiritual materials of books. This is what, first of all, we remember about Harold.

We remember him too, quiet in manner, modest, deeply aware of the dignity of literature; a dignity he reflected in his person. He did not think cocktail parties or any sensational gimmicks were necessary to publishing. A book must stand by itself, he thought, without benefit of special selling tricks. As a Centurion writer and editor said of him, he "was the summing up of good taste—in the books he published, in his approach to life, in his dealings with people."

Harold Guinzburg was born in New York sixty-one years ago. He graduated from Harvard in 1921 and like many others who make books began his career on newspapers—in Bridgeport, Connecticut, and Boston. He was then briefly associated with Simon and Schuster; in 1925, with George S. Oppenheimer, he established the Viking Press. The story is that Rockwell Kent was responsible for the name by drawing a Viking ship in the design of the trade mark. "A symbol," the new adventurers said, "of enterprise, adventure and exploration." A merger with B. W. Huebsch brought, among other authors, James Joyce, D. H. Lawrence, Sherwood Anderson, and Thorstein Veblen into the two-family house. Early in Viking's career, Harold established the Literary Guild book club—sold later to Doubleday. In 1937, another merger with Covici-Friede attached John Steinbeck, and Viking published The Grapes of Wrath which won the Pulitzer Prize, went through twelve printings, and was translated into fourteen languages.

The so-called "portable library" was a Guinzburg idea, and Viking's portable which has run to sixty volumes was a precursor of the "quality" paperbacks, now called "Compass." Harold's long acquaintance with European publishing made him realize that a book well printed on good stock but without the elaborate traditional American binding would have wide circulation.

No one was better fitted for the publication division of the Office of War Information in the Second World War. He knew precisely what books and magazines were best adapted to foreign distribution and, active both here and abroad, saw OWI's program in this direction through to success. This was, of course, a forerunner of the work that is carried on today by the United States Information Service.

There were sides to Harold's life that one does not readily associate with his reticence and quiet dignity. He was, for instance, as one of his friends remarked "the greatest poker player I have ever known." He was a close friend of Harpo Marx and was familiar with the entertainment world. He was more at home, a Centurion colleague remembers, at movie premieres than at literary salons.

Active on the board of Freedom House and the New York chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, Harold Guinzburg was a liberal in the best sense of the word deeply devoted to the proposition that every human being should have the freedom to "enjoy the unfettered circulation of knowledge and ideas."

He was not a "joiner" of indiscriminate clubs, circles, or groups, but at the new members' dinner after his election he said to a friend "the Century is the only club of which I ever wished to be a member."

He was a member for about ten years. It was not long enough.

Chauncey Harris Hand

Blink Hand (why Blink is one of those questions whose answer is lost in the limbo of forgotten school days) believed that a good lawyer who knew nothing about the subject was more useful than a bad lawyer who was an expert. The subject that gave rise to this wise remark was copyright. He was talking with Centurion publisher Curtice Hitchcock who was interested, at the time, in establishing copyright for such exiles from Germany as Einstein and Thomas Mann who had become stateless persons. Blink knew little about copyright, but his intellectual curiosity plus his friendship for Reynal and Hitchcock led him to plunge deep into the problem and get the best lawyers in his office to work on it with the result that the publishers won their case and the authors were protected.

Hand's specialty was railways. He was Eastern Counsel for the Great Northern Railroad and special counsel and director of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad Corporation. He was director and member of the policy committee of the Transportation Association of America. But he was also a teacher. In addition to his busy practice as a senior member of the New York law firm of Dorr, Hand, Whittaker and Watson, he was on the faculty of the Yale Law School and was a favorite lecturer there.

His life began in New Jersey where he was born, but he became a Connecticut Yankee—devoted to Old Lyme, that haunt of many Centurions. He had an old frame house there, and a neighbor reports that he kept adding wings to it in all directions. He also had running through his place a trout stream which, at one point, widened into a perfect natural swimming pool. It was a fine place for an ideal host—as Blink was—and he loved entertaining. One of the high points of the summer was the foregathering, centering round him, of members of the Yale and Harvard law faculties. In the fall, he would treat his friends to venison and hard cider.

Hand was educated at the University of Cincinnati; he took his law degree and was editor of the Law Review at the Harvard Law School. In the First World War, he was director of the Bureau of Enemy Trade, War Trade Board. At war's end, he served on the War Loan staff of the United States Treasury Department. He was also assistant to the vice-governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

His Centurion friends are sorry that all his far-flung interests too often kept him away from the Century. He had been a member since 1947.

Learned Hand

His friends called him "B"; some, perhaps, not knowing why. But it was all that had stuck from a first name—Billings—given him at baptism and which, without regret, he had dropped. Yet he didn't mind the "B" for he was friendly and knew it was a vehicle of affection, and the august "Learned" might have been a roadblock on the path between love and greatness. He had modest thoughts about the podium on which he stood: to be a judge was not to judge, it was to interpret; to tell men why when they encountered the law. He worked less by codes than by intuition; nothing was ever more characteristic of his thought than his most celebrated utterance: "The spirit of liberty is the spirit which is not too sure that it is right."

To Centurions who knew him well, B Hand had become something quite apart from the bench; easy to talk to because you knew he was listening, that he was accepting you always on his level. His response might be quite unexpected; sometimes it was ferocious in disapproval but always more provocative than frightening. "Why? Why?" he would insist, and suddenly you were thinking of reasons that had never occurred to you, and it was no matter whether you were talking about ancient Greece, Shakespeare, or rare roast beef.

A few Centurions had the good luck to be present at an argument between Judge Hand and Lawyer George Martin. George (whom B called "Brigadier") was unused to defeat on forensic occasions; his rebuttals were quick, witty, sometimes outrageous, but he met his match with the Judge. The thing was gladiatorial; it was on a plane which, perhaps, is never reached except in the Century. If the conflict was about a court decision, an election, a president, a statute, a book, or a technicality of poker, the scene became equally thrilling to the audience.

These are happy memories—there were many others—and B loved the place where such things could happen. In all our history, no member has ever been elected to honorary membership with more acclaim.

"It is in a spirit of humility," read the citation, "that we have welcomed him here whenever he has found the time, in his immeasurably useful life, to come within these doors. Yet his own modesty has matched, if that be possible, his great achievements. He has put us at our ease with his humor and geniality even though, perhaps unrealized by him, he has left us wiser with each visit. He has honored this association with his presence. Now we honor ourselves by honoring him."

We remember, too, his address to the new members when he himself had been a member for fifty years. His address made no sense, and it was magnificent. It was wholly Centurion. Here was a man who had been called one of the greatest judges our country has produced, relaxing into the most charming nonsense with a Yankee folksong for a climax.

The Century, he said, was the best club. He wouldn't tell why any more than Socrates would tell why his club was the best. They exiled Socrates and did him to death because he would not tell why.

"I think," said B, "it's a good club and it's a damned good club. Don't question me about it. If you do I will say 'Let's have some cocktails.' And then I will send out to the barkeeper and say, 'Slip this lad an iced hemlock.' "

A Centurion lawyer has called Judge Hand an "architect of the law." In some two thousand opinions he has built many enduring structures. Many, too, have something akin to the aesthetic quality in art. They are simple, economical and direct in words. They appeal to the reason that is beneath all reasons; they penetrate argument through to common-sense faith. One is startled, sometimes, by the sudden poetry in them.

Hand's independence has defied all efforts to label him, to imprison him in a category. Some, for instance, who called him a "liberal" because he decided against the suppression of the communistic New Masses and because of his opinion that James Joyce's Ulysses was not obscene, were confounded when he upheld the conviction of certain Communist leaders under the Smith Act. Yet lawyers of all stripes have been put to it when they have tried to find either dialectic or moral flaws in his findings. Again, he was emphatic about witch hunts for Red infiltrators:

“Risk for risk,” he said, “for myself, I had rather take my chance that some traitors will escape detection than spread abroad a spirit of general suspicion and distrust, which accepts rumors and gossip in place of undismayed and un-intimidated inquiry.”

Billings Learned Hand was born in Albany in 1872. Learned was his mother's maiden name. His father, Samuel Hand, was a judge of the Court of Appeals, New York State's highest court. Learned was graduated from Harvard Law School in 1895. He was editor, there, of The Law Review. Before his appointment to the federal bench, he was a partner in the firm of Gould and Wilkie. In 1912, he was defeated in his candidacy for Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals on the ticket of Theodore Roosevelt's Progressive Party.

After serving for fifteen years as a Federal District Judge, he was appointed by President Coolidge to the Circuit Court of Appeals. He retired from active service on the bench in 1951. This by no means meant retirement from activity. Indeed, it was during his latest years that he became most known and celebrated as a public figure. He made many speeches on the American traditions of democracy, of freedom of dissent, of the spirit of liberty, and of human rights. He delivered three lectures in the Oliver Wendell Holmes series at Harvard, later published in a book called The Bill of Rights. More widely read was his volume The Spirit of Liberty.

Because the highest court cited Judge Hand's opinions more often than those of any lower court jurist in the nation, he was often called “the tenth justice of the Supreme Court.” Why he was never appointed to that court, is a mystery that has puzzled many lawyers and law scholars. In general legal opinion he was on the plane with Marshall, Holmes and Brandeis, and Justice of the Supreme Court Benjamin Cardozo called him "the greatest living American jurist."

To us whose memory of him will not fade, he is "B" Hand, our friend, for whom love will never be cooled by any austerity of admiration.

Alexander Iselin Henderson

Alec not only served his profession with distinction, he served his country as well on several critical occasions. It is unusual for a man, even a Centurion, to take part in two world wars, but Alec did and in between worked at corporate law and, for a while, took a shot at banking. All these things left little time for the Century, but Alec enjoyed it when he could.

One Centurion classmate remembers that when he talked to Alec, he always looked up. This was, of course, because Alec was so much taller than he and so infallibly erect, but so were lots of other men, and he couldn't remember ever looking up at any of them. So he decided that there was something more than a physical act—that he looked up in his mind too, at someone far above him. Alec never knew this and would not have believed it, so friendly he was and unassuming, wholly without arrogance or any consciousness of superiority.

Alexander Henderson was born in New York, was in the Harvard College class of 1913. He went through college in three years and spent what would have been his senior year at Trinity College in Cambridge, England. There, he wrote in a class report, he "had lots of fun but did little work." (The picture of Alec not working is scarcely credible.) He then spent three years at Harvard Law School. In the summer of 1915, he drove an ambulance with the American Field Service in France; a year later he was with Squadron A on the Mexican border, but he was back in the ambulance service in France when the United States entered the war in the spring of 1917. He transferred to the French Artillery School at Fontainebleau. Before the year was out, he was in the American Army as a first lieutenant in the 7th Field Artillery, First Division, A.E.F. in which he remained throughout the war. His service included the battles of Montdidier, Noyon Offensive, Aisne-Marne Offensive, St. Mihiel, and Meuse-Argonne. After several months in the Army of Occupation, he was assigned to the Peace Commission. He was discharged as a captain.

For seven years, he practiced law in New York. "I then tried investment banking for a few years," he wrote in a class report, "but was soon convinced that I was not qualified to be a banker, either by inclination or ability, and in 1933 I returned to the law, rejoining the firm with which I had been before." Here at Cravath and Henderson, however, his banking experience probably helped him in his work in financial and corporate law.

He entered government service in 1938, and from 1940 to 1942 he was with the War Production Board. After the United States entered the Second World War, he was commissioned lieutenant colonel in the Army Transportation Corps and served in North Africa. Afterward, he was deputy post commander in Naples and Marseilles. He was decorated with the French Croix de Guerre, the degree of chevalier in the French Legion of Honor and the American Legion of Merit.

In 1948, he was general counsel, Economic Cooperation Administration. He has been, in addition to his membership in the American and New York City Bar Associations, a director of the New York Visiting Nurse Service and the New York United Service Organizations. He was a trustee of Smith College and the Educational Testing Service.

He had been a Centurion for more than thirty years.

Richard Herpers

Dick Herpers loved the sea, and his shipmates loved him. In his last illness, which led to his far too early death, he got a stream of letters and post cards from men all over the country who had served with him. It is not usual for a man, after a successful start in business, to give it up and enter a service academy. Yet that is what Dick Herpers did, in 1942. When the Second World War came to America, he knew he must be in it, and it was the sea that called to him above all other voices. So, he went into the Coast Guard Academy and came out of it an ensign. He began as executive officer of the St. Louis Coast Guard Barracks, but before the war was over he commanded an army freight supply ship in the South Pacific and Philippine areas. At war's end, he was Captain of the Yard at the Coast Guard Separation Center in Brooklyn. It was there that he was sought out by the secretary of Columbia University who asked him to become his assistant.

Herpers had long since come to the attention of the staff at Columbia. As an undergraduate, he was manager of the varsity football team, and in this job he was especially praised by Coach Lou Little, who had directed some twenty-seven Columbia teams. He took his A.B. in 1938.

Three years after he began work as assistant, he was appointed Secretary of the University. He soon became one of the most respected and popular men on the campus. At Columbia, he also served as member of the Advisory Committee on Personal Policies, the Committee on Retirement and Insurance, secretary of the University Council, secretary of the Council for Research in the Social Sciences, and secretary of the Men's Faculty Club. These posts brought him into close personal relations with faculty members—new teachers in particular whom he advised as soon as they arrived on such practical matters as housing and schooling for young children.

He traveled a great deal and made such detailed observations in Europe that he was able to give valuable advice to touring faculty members. One would hesitate to start on a sabbatical leave, for example, without first consulting Secretary Herpers. Often he would provide letters to be presented as "academic passports" to rectors, principals, and other presiding heads of foreign institutions of higher learning. In 1956, he went to Europe aboard a United States warship as a representative of President Kirk of Columbia on the annual summer cruise of the Naval Academy and Naval ROTC midshipmen.

Unhappily, his membership in the Century was short. Elected in 1957, he had little opportunity to enjoy the Club before his last long illness took him from us. He is remembered here as an enthusiastic pool player and regular attendant at the monthly dinners.

He died in his forty-fifth year.

John Philip Hogan

Some of New York's most vital construction projects owe much to the engineering skill of John Hogan. His association with Centurion William Barclay Parsons was close; he was a partner in Parsons's firm and, under him, directed the New York Water Power Investigation from 1920 to 1923. Like Parsons, he was especially interested in subways and water supply. When the New York subway was near completion in 1904 and Parsons, after years of work on it under frustrating conditions, left to take a position with the Panama Canal Commission, Hogan began his first important work as engineer of the New York Rapid Transit Commission. Two years later, he was division engineer of construction on the Catskill Aqueduct, a post he held for eleven years.

In the First World War, John Hogan was an officer of engineers; in two years in France he held grades from captain to lieutenant colonel and ended on the General Staff of the Army. After the war, he returned to New York and served on the city's Board of Water Supply. It was in 1926 that he was made a partner in the firm of Parsons, Brinckerhoff, Hogan and McDonald. In 1939, he was vice-president and chief engineer of the New York World's Fair. In 1940, he served on the Army and Navy Munitions Board.

Hogan was born in Chicago in 1881; he took his A.B. at Harvard in 1903 and his S.B. a year later. He was given the honorary degree of Doctor of Engineering by New York University in 1940.

He was formerly vice-president and president of the American Society of Civil Engineers; a member of the American Institute of Mechanical Engineers, the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal and the Order of the Purple Heart. He was chevalier of the Légion d'honneur and an Officer of the Order of the Crown in Rumania.

He was one of our elder Centurions; his membership dates from 1928.

Alfred Carey Howell

The first man in America to be given honorary membership in Phi Beta Kappa, a trustee of two educational institutions, an amateur of the graphic arts and incunabula, Alfred Howell presented a significant example of education without benefit of teachers. One of ten children whose father died when Alfred was a baby of two years, he grew up in hardship and never got beyond the sixth grade in school. At twelve, he went to work to support his mother.

There were smoke and smog in Pittsburgh in those days, but there were also the Carnegie Library and Museum, and the boy spent what time he could spare from the steel mill there. Thus began his interest in books and the arts. But he learned about steel too, and, after seventeen years in Pittsburgh, he was appointed president of the Ames Shovel and Tool Company in Boston. He then went from steel into banking, came to New York and was vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Company for twenty-one years. Finally, he was president and chairman of the board of his home-town bank, the Bethel National Bank of Bethel, Connecticut. From this position he retired in 1957.

His love of books and fine printing and the graphic arts generally led him to work toward the development of the Graphic Arts Division at the Princeton University Library. He also took great interest in the collections of the Grolier Club, to which he gave generously. He served on many committees there.

Howell's generosity extended to many causes outside those of his avocation. He was, for instance, chairman for a time of the Christmas Seal Sale of the New York Tuberculosis and Health Association; also of the New York Heart Association. He was treasurer of Funds for Finland, chairman of the finance committee of the Corporation for the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches, president of the Annuity Fund for the Congregational Ministers, and treasurer of Phi Beta Kappa Associates. He was trustee of Finch Junior College, of Centurion John Verdery's Wooster School in Danbury, Connecticut, and of Bucknell University. It was Bucknell that gave him the honorary degree of LL.D, in 1946.

Alfred Howell was devoted to the Century. He had many friends there and some of his happiest hours were spent at the Club. He was a member for twenty-seven of his seventy-seven years.

William Mills Ivins, Junior

Less today but in the old days of the Century there were always one or two, two or three, members whose emphasis was taken by dignified and sensitive older men for rudeness. Some of us can remember being at first scared by these apparently fierce characters and later loving them for their honesty and for the warmth that lay beneath their crustiness. Most of them—immortals now—were motivated in their sometime rages by their abhorrence of the stuffed shirt, of the holier than thou, of the pretentious, the complacent, the pompous, and the ponderous.

Bill Ivins could startle, stimulate, provoke, and often devastate. Young men (in spirit not years) sat at his feet and listened with delight; the old ones whose wisdom had become a burden to them, shied away lest he tread on their precious toes. But many, who had listened, honestly argued, and sincerely inquired, were often beneficiaries of Bill's kindness, for to them he was inexhaustibly helpful. There was no distance he would not go to set a student on a right road; as a friend said: "He saw what others did not or could not see. He opened men's eyes, pointed to untrodden paths and redirected their thoughts."

Bill's interests were wide, ranging from art criticism to social history, from mathematics to medicine, and from literature to law. He admired Gallic clarity, conciseness, and wit and had vast scorn for ponderous Germanic scholarship. What had started as a hobby became his vocation; in it he was one of the experts that determine its trends, its cults, and its vogues.

When he graduated from Harvard in 1901, he was undecided about his life work. He studied briefly at the University of Munich, held briefly a job on the editorial staff of World's Work, and in 1904 entered Columbia Law School. Three years later, he was admitted to the New York Bar. All this time, and even after he had begun practice in the law, he had been collecting prints and becoming an expert in their appraisal. His talents could not long be hidden from the directors of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and when they asked him to be the museum's curator of prints, he abandoned the law and accepted.

From a small collection, Ivins built the Metropolitan's large and varied treasure house of some 150,000 items. His understanding of prints soon became so celebrated that he had only to mention a name and repeat it a few times at cocktail parties to have every print dealer in New York place examples of the artist's work in his window.

Bill Ivins was a prolific writer on his subject. His books were Prints and Books, On the Rationalization of Sight, Art and Geometry, and Prints and Visual Communication. In 1946, he retired from the museum and went to live in his house in Woodbury, Connecticut, in which he had his own collection of rare books and works of art—among them a series of woodcuts by Titian. He raised peonies in congenial soil and carried on a large correspondence with people all over the world. He wrote his letters with quill pens he cut himself, with black ink he made, and on paper he selected with his usual meticulous care. Occasionally he wrote on handmade sheets a hundred years old.

In his last years, he became something of a hermit, and visits to New York were rare. In older times, he loved the Century, captivated the long table with his spirited talk, played a leisurely game of billiards, and those who were not scared of him gathered round him to talk and listen.

He was a Centurion for more than half his life.

Louis La Beaume

You could address a letter "Louis La Beaume, St. Louis," and it would be sure to get into Louis's hands without delay. The name was as identified with the city as Cabot is with Boston or du Pont with Wilmington. The first Louis La Beaume was one of the town's first organizers and one of the builders of the railroad that added to the river route's connection with other cities of the Middle West.

Centurion Louis continued the tradition. As an architect, he had an impressive part in the World's Fair of 1904. He did much for the City Art Museum, and, on the City Plan Commission and the Plaza Commission, he helped, as the Post-Dispatch told in an editorial, "to shape the character of St. Louis."

Louis La Beaume was born in the ancestral city in 1873. After graduating from the Manual Training School, he took a special course in architecture at Columbia University. He studied abroad for a year, then was assistant to E. L. Masqueray, chief of design of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

In a long career in the practice of architecture, La Beaume designed, in addition to private residences, churches, schools, institutional and municipal public buildings. There were Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. buildings, the Alton Memorial Hospital, the St. Louis Maternity Hospital, and the buildings of Lindenwood College at St. Charles of which his firm was the official architect.

He was a Fellow, director and vice-president, successively, of the American Institute of Architects and an academician of the National Academy of Design.

La Beaume was known as a wit and an urbane talker. Between his achievements in design, he wrote light verse, much of which was collected in a booklet called Rhyming Along the Way. In it he had some fun with some of the institutions of his native city such as the Civic League and the Chamber of Commerce. He also did a lively epic on "The Founding of St. Louis."

He was a Centurion for just short of thirty years, which were more than a third of his life of eighty-eight.

Thomas Hinckley Lanman

Tom Lanman's smile cheered everyone that knew him, and it must have reassured the hundreds of suffering children he helped back to health. For many years, also, it made boys forget the injuries that had come in play on the football field. From "football doctor" at a famous boy's "prep" to president of the Massachusetts Medical Society and Clinical Professor of Surgery at the Harvard Medical School, Tom's primary interest was in young people.

"This age group," Tom wrote in a Harvard class report, "is harder to treat in many ways than the adult, but to me it is much more satisfactory. I have not regretted my almost complete retirement from the field of general adult surgery."

Parallel with his surgical practice he taught surgery at the Harvard Medical School. He also evolved new methods for dealing with the urological disorders of infancy and childhood. These have become standard procedures everywhere as has the surgical treatment of pulmonary troubles of infants and young children in which he was a pioneer. For these and other achievements, he was awarded the William E. Ladd Medal of the American Pediatric Society.

Born in Cambridge in 1891, he graduated from Harvard College in 1912 and four years later took his doctor's degree from the Harvard Medical School. In the First World War, he served overseas as a first lieutenant in the Army Medical Corps. After the war, he served a surgical internship at the Boston Children's Hospital. In 1928, he was appointed to the staff of the Harvard Medical School and taught there for nearly thirty years. During this time, he was consultant in surgery at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, visiting surgeon at the Children's Hospital, and on the editorial staff of The New England Journal of Medicine. After he had become Clinical Professor of Surgery at the school, he was named director of alumni relations of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association. In this post he was instrumental in raising more than a million and a quarter dollars in alumni contributions for unrestricted academic purposes.

In the Second World War, Tom was a colonel in the Medical Corps and served as Chief of Surgical Service, Fifth General Hospital, Command Officer, 10th Station Hospital, and Surgical Consultant to the 12th Hospital Center. For this service he was awarded the Legion of Merit.

With all these heavy responsibilities, he was still able to relax at the Tavern Club in Boston, where he took part in some of the club's shows. He was an accomplished amateur actor. His best role was that of Dr. Watson, Sherlock Holmes's companion and promoter, who was perennially astonished by the detective's skill. A member of the Tavern who had seen him play this part is said to have testified to his acting skill by saying,

"Doctor, if I had known how slow-witted you were, I would never have let you treat my children!"

We Centurions who knew of these doings could not help being a little jealous of that Boston club that is so nearly kin to our own in its possession of Tom Lanman, but, after all, one could not expect a doctor of his importance to be in two places at once in his spare time.

Robert Devore Leigh

Robert Leigh was an expert in International Broadcasting and wrote, in collaboration with Llewellyn White, an enlightening book on the subject with the suggestive title Peoples Speaking to Peoples. Much of this book's content was based on his experience as director of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service of the Federal Communications Commission during the Second World War, as well as his later work as chairman of the United Nations Monitoring Commission. In these jobs he was aware of everything that was being carried on the waves in this critical period in world history.

But Leigh was also an intensive student of education with special interest in the library as an educational tool. His inquiry into the role of public libraries in the United States conducted for the Social Science Reserve Council prepared him for the post of dean of the Columbia University School of Library Service which he entered in 1956.

Born in Nelson, Nebraska, in 1890, Leigh came East for his higher education and took his A.B., summa cum laude, at Bowdoin in 1914. His first years after graduation were devoted to teaching; he became a professor of government at Williams College in 1922. Six years later, he was appointed president of Bennington College. In 1941, he left Bennington to undertake a survey of the instruction of social studies in high schools in the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton.

Perhaps no more all-embracing study of freedom of the press—with all the delicate impingements of war upon that principle—has ever been made than that directed by Leigh soon after the Second World War for the University of Chicago. The university had organized the Commission on Freedom of the Press at the time when the question was under hot discussion, and it was exceedingly wise in turning over the conduct of the inquiry to one who had been at the center of world news in the most critical phases of the conflict.

Robert Leigh became a Centurion, the year after war's end, in 1946, and by the time of his death had many friends among us who enjoyed his quiet humor and humane philosophy.

Georg John Lober

The children who climb over the statue of Hans Christian Andersen in Central Park and pat the "ugly duckling" at his feet pay a daily tribute to the sculptor whose fancy fashioned this charming group. So too do those adults—some of us with aging memories—who stop to look at the old Broadway favorite George M. Cohan whose statue stands on Duffy Square.

Georg Lober was a conservative artist who worked in the tradition of realism. He varied his work in sculpture with administrative service on New York City's Art Commission, of which he was executive secretary for seventeen years. New York thus owes him much: for his statues and for his vigilance in keeping ugliness away. He has, too, fought vigorously for the preservation of historic buildings and treasures of art. At one time, for example, he persuaded Mayor O'Dwyer to let the deteriorating portraits in City Hall be restored, an operation which with other renovations is said to have cost some three million dollars.

Georg Lober was born in Chicago and studied sculpture at the National Academy of Design and the Beaux-Arts Institute of Design. He studied also in Copenhagen, his family's ancestral home. For a while, he was apprentice to the late Gutzon Borglum.

His work has been exhibited far and wide. Certain of his sculptures are permanently in the Metropolitan Museum in New York, the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, the Musée des Medailles in Paris and the National Museum in Copenhagen. In recognition of his work, King Christian IX of Denmark decorated him with the Knight Cross of Danneborg.

Georg Lober has won many awards. Among those that honored him are the Architectural League of New York, the Art Institute of Chicago, the Connecticut Academy of Fine Arts, the Art Center of the Oranges, the Grand Central Art Galleries, the Allied Artists of America, and the National Arts Club. The National Sculpture Society, of which he was a former vice-president gave him their Medal of Honor. He was a fellow in perpetuity of the Metropolitan and was formerly corresponding secretary of the National Academy of Design.

For years Lober was chairman of the National Sculpture Society's loan fund established by Centurion Archer Huntington and Anna Hyatt Huntington to help sculptors in need.

He was elected to the Century in 1947.

Henry Gardner Lord

A Centurion who wanted to pick someone's brains about the history of the McGraw-Hill publishing enterprise was told to visit "Uncle Henry"—the officer of the company, it was said, who knew more than anyone else. When he called, an alert man, straight as an arrow—in his late fifties it would seem, or early sixties at the most—rose to greet him. They talked for three hours. At the end of this fascinating conversation which ranged far outside the subject—to New England sea captains, to salmon fishing, to the anxieties of the great Depression—"Uncle Henry" rose again, gave his visitor a brisk handshake and without the slightest sign of fatigue, said:

"I am ninety. Perhaps I don't remember as well as I used to. You'd better check on what I've told you."

A year later the visitor went again to Lord's office and was told by his secretary that the boss was on a fishing trip in Maine. The secretary told who were with him. Half a dozen of these ardent fishermen were Centurions. None, however, even approached ninety-one.

The rendezvous was Quartet Camp on Grand Lake. Every spring for nearly sixty years, Henry Lord would go there while it was still cold. The objective was landlocked salmon, but there were diversions such as long evenings close to a warm fire when the men—as anglers have always done—told their stories. It was here that Lord's talents as a raconteur were conspicuous. One of his Centurion companions tells:

"When a tall story was under way, he helped the liar with helpful and witty prodding. When someone recounted his difficulties and regrets, Henry eased the strain by telling about some of his own mistakes."

In the summer vacations, Lord would go to the Ausable Club in the Adirondacks where, through his eighties, he would play his regular daily sets of tennis.

In other seasons, however, he was in his office at McGraw-Hill of which he was a director for thirty-three years. For twenty-two of these, he was vice-president and for five, Chairman of the Finance Committee. A master of finance, he is credited with having pulled his company, singlehanded, out of the doldrums of the Depression in 1932.

Henry Lord was born in Boston in 1865, descended from a line of shipbuilders and shipmasters. His grandfather, Nathan Lord, was a captain in the Revolutionary Army. His secondary education was at the celebrated Boston Latin School from which he was admitted to Harvard. But family circumstances forced him to leave college and get a job with a wool brokerage firm. Here began his lifelong interest in textiles. In 1888, he founded one of the early trade papers in the field, Textile World—published, today, by McGraw-Hill—and from then on, concentrated on the publication of business papers of various kinds. One of these was called Lord's Power and Machinery, and prospective advertisers asked the salesmen if this was a religious paper dealing with the power of prayer!

Lord was one of the first reformers of the ethics of business papers, insisting on the publication of accurate circulation figures and uniform advertising rates. He helped found the Associated Business Publications to maintain this code among all trade journals.

He was a director of the English-Speaking Union, organized and became president of its Boston branch. He was also a director of the Boston Y.M.C.A.

He cherished his membership in the Century and especially enjoyed the monthly dinners at which he was a regular attendant as long as his health allowed. He was a member for sixteen years.

George Oliver May

Some of you artists and writers and professors who have so little understanding of economics that you can't make out your own income tax returns, are not aware that there is a philosophy of accounting that is as profound and as entertaining as any philosophy you know. Once you have cut through the sacrosanct theories which economists have for centuries embellished with long words, you find yourself—at least George May did—in a realm of clear, simple logic pleasantly juggled by human values. Econometrics, for instance, with its smart statistical methods was like a meal that tasted good but had little nourishment. He contended that there was no such thing as absolutely accurate valuation. It must be either approximate or fraudulent.

There was no formula, he said, for straight line depreciation that was universally applicable. The value of the latest luxury liner, he said, depreciates by half as soon as a still later luxury liner comes along; the ship is relegated to the status of an ocean carrier work horse. Consider, however, the railroad freight car which preserves its value unchanged until it all but falls apart.

May was born at Tergumonth, England, and became a chartered accountant in 1897. His first job was with Price Waterhouse in London. When the firm established its own company in the United States in 1901, May left England and joined it. The following year, he became a partner and was senior partner in 1911.

He soon gave evidence that he was far more than an accountant. His interests reached into the law and the art and science of government as well as economics. He wrote at length in favor of corporate financial statements that are fully public—now an accepted practice. He was a tax expert. He was often a witness before government agencies and committees of investigation, and he confounded many a counsel with his unorthodox logic. From 1927, he was adviser to the New York Stock Exchange and was largely responsible for the present system of annual auditing by independent accounting firms.

During the First World War he served in the Treasury Department and the War Trade Board, and his counsel in income tax matters was afterward valuable to various government bureaus.

For many years, George May was a member of the informal Economic Group at the Century which he enriched out of his own wide experience and bubbling spirits. There was, a fellow member recalls, "in his make-up, a Puckish quality that helped to leaven discussion of even the most recondite matters."

David Hunter Miller

That man of mystery, Colonel House, adviser to President Wilson, seems often to have acted on pure intuition. This was surely true when he picked Hunter Miller above a host of international lawyers to advise him on international law in the preparation for the peace conference that followed the First World War. It seemed an odd choice: Miller had practiced only commercial law. But House had met him in Texas where Miller had followed cotton interests as a member of the New York Cotton Exchange. He took him away from cotton into what was known as the "Inquiry," a conference of scholars organized to prepare to accompany President Wilson to Paris. For legal advice House depended on Miller rather than on the staff of experts composing the Inquiry. Indeed, he took him overseas before the Inquiry itself went so that he might have personal understanding of the legal aspects of what was to come. And Miller, despite his wholly different background, was able to give House what he needed.

Someone has said that intuition is merely instantaneous reasoning based on experience. Perhaps House saw in Miller something that recalled an association with men—not education or training. He recognized, because he had seen it before, an intelligence great enough to cope with the unfamiliar. In any case, Hunter Miller justified what might have been called House's "snap judgment." One of Miller's Centurion friends and one-time close associate ascribes Miller's success in part to his prodigious capacity for work. Every day, he worked all day and far into the night. "He worked with ferocity as if he had been told that he had only one more week to live."

In Paris, with Cecil Hurst of the British Foreign Office, he prepared the working draft of the Covenant of the League of Nations. This formed the basis of discussion before the conference commission on the League. They also prepared the final draft adopted by both the commission and the conference.

A Centurion friend who was at the Paris conference watched Miller with amazement as he sat at the Conference Table. "Miller was forever passing up little notes to Woodrow Wilson who read them, accepted them and acted upon them."

Fortunately for historians, Hunter Miller kept a meticulous record of all that happened during that fateful conference. He kept a diary, which he wrote faithfully every night, that was later published along with some nineteen volumes of letters, memoranda, and photographs. The Carnegie Endowment for World Peace later presented these to thirty libraries in various nations, and one set was microfilmed by the Library of Congress and given to the United Nations charter conference in San Francisco in 1945. Miller also published several volumes which included The Drafting of the Covenant, The Peace Pact of Paris, and The Geneva Protocol.

David Hunter Miller, as he later styled himself though his early friends knew him only as "Hunter" was born in New York in 1875. As a young man, he was an officer of the Ninth New York Volunteer Infantry in the Spanish-American War. He received his law degrees at the New York Law School—LL.B. in 1910, LL.M. in 1911. He practiced law in New York until June 1917, when he was appointed special assistant in the Department of State. It was in the following year that Secretary of State Lansing made him a member of a committee to anticipate postwar problems.

After the war, he was appointed editor of treaties in the State Department, and, under his aegis, eight volumes of treaties were published.

Miller died at eighty-six after thirty-four years of membership in the Century.

Ray Morris

Pessimists among us have been known to shake their heads about the Club's finances. But within the memory of the oldest Centurion, no Treasurer—and who, if not he, would know about alarming deficits?—has ever been seen shaking his head, even privately. On the contrary, it is our Treasurers, who in the darkest days of the world outside, have buoyed us up with the figurative jingling of coins and, like a celebrated general who followed a sequence of bad news with the statement "the situation is excellent," have pointed toward the future with a smile. We older ones will never forget Twelfth Night, 1933, when that "noblest Roman of them all," Henry de Forest Baldwin, Treasurer, let our Roman revelers put on the gayest and probably the most expensive party in the Club's history.

The late Dick Pratt followed in the same tradition and so, conspicuously, did Ray Morris. Whoever served with Ray on the Board of Management will remember how he followed each slow and solemn reading of figures with some remark so funny that the glasses rang with the laughter of the august board. He had a way of speaking without emphasis and with a deadpan face that made what he said funnier. Indeed, when he spoke seriously, his tone was so casual that, sometimes, the immense significance of his statements did not, for a moment, register with his listeners.

On a less formal level Ray contributed gaiety as well as wisdom to one of the Century's many inner circles—a group of members that dined and wined periodically and talked about economics. They discussed the threats of depression and inflation. “Out of his own rich experience” writes a member of this “Economic Group,” “Ray contributed fruitfully to the substance of our discussions. More than this, his gentleness and native courtesy did much to establish an atmosphere conducive to good talk.”

Born in New Haven in 1876, he was educated at Phillips Andover and Yale. He graduated from college in 1901 and took his A.M. two years later. From Yale, he went to the editorial staff of Railroad Gazette and, from 1903 to 1910, was its managing editor, secretary, and director. In 1911, he became a partner in the firm of White, Weld and Company. In the war years, he was in the Federal Reserve Bank, and from 1921 to his retirement in 1957, he was a partner of Brown Brothers Harriman and Company. In the course of his business life, he served as director of thirty-two corporations, including several with international affiliations.

He was at various times, president of the Investment Bankers Association, trustee of Vassar College, of Sarah Lawrence College, of the Society of St. Johnland, and of Brearley School of New York, and governor of the Yale Publishing Association. He was active in the American Scandinavian Foundation whose finances he helped manage, and he made annual trips to Scandinavian countries. Denmark, Finland, and Norway all decorated him.

Ray has gone to join the band of our immortals but he has left much with us. Courage to face what dark hours may lie ahead is of his legacy. "Pay no attention" we hear his even voice saying, "to those red marks on the balance sheet. Give them a month or so and they will all turn black."

George Wharton Pepper

Our honorary Centurion, Learned Hand, whose memorial is on another page, once said to the American Law Institute in a tribute to George Wharton Pepper:

"And we remember—and always shall remember—that whatever we have done and whatever we are that has been good, it has been through him, through his authorship, through his leadership and his guidance."

It was fortunate for his friends and the hundreds that he befriended that this man lived so long. In the ninety-four years of an extremely active life, Pepper was both brilliant and humane—qualities not always juxtaposed. He was lawyer, author, senator, and churchman and, as counterpoint to the practice of such offices, was perpetually concerned with anonymous charity. What he did publicly for the city with which he is inseparably identified is known; so is his effort for the betterment of the law's application; but what he did privately for men in straits may never be told.

As a lad of twenty-seven, he argued a case in the United States Supreme Court; still under thirty, he made the principal address at the first meeting of the Pennsylvania Bar Association. These early beginnings seemed to presage a later life on the bench, but he declined the offers of judgeships—including one of an appointment to the Supreme Court—so that he might continue in private practice. In this he was still busy when he was eighty-five. He did, however, consent to an appointment to the United States Senate, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Bois Penrose and to run for election thereafter.

His performance in court was punctuated by humor; his public appearances were aided by a seemingly miraculous memory. The ease with which he spoke without notes disguised the careful preparation of his addresses. It was supposed that he talked extemporaneously; yet there was always a written script in the background—a script he had faultlessly memorized. Once, when he had written out a speech on a train, he handed the manuscript to a friend who sat beside him. "I'll send it back to you, immediately," said his friend. "No, don't bother," said Pepper. "I won't need it." Later, when he spoke, the friend followed his words in the script. Not a word was omitted; none was out of place.

It was said that he could recite the whole of Gilbert and Sullivan. This facility was thought to be a gift. In fact, it had come through hard work. As a boy, eye trouble had prevented his reading for a year. In this time his mother read to him constantly and persuaded him to memorize what she read. So, he contracted the habit, and he kept it alive through his life.

George Wharton Pepper was born in Philadelphia in 1867; he graduated at twenty from the University of Pennsylvania and took his Bachelor of Laws degree there two years later. His law firm in Philadelphia was Pepper, Bodine, Stokes and Hamilton; later it became Pepper, Hamilton and Scheetz. It was in 1922 that he accepted the Senate appointment; the term of his election ended in 1927. Meanwhile, he had lectured and taught at the University of Pennsylvania (in which he was Algernon Sydney Biddle Professor of Law) and at Yale. He had also been Junior, Senior, and General Counsel of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, a post he held until two years before his death. His service to insurance was signalized by his election to membership in The Association of Life Insurance Counsel in 1919 and to emeritus membership in 1957.

In the course of his life, Pepper was awarded fifteen honorary degrees from colleges and universities in the United States and Canada. He was decorated Grand Officer of Belgium's Order of Leopold II and awarded the gold medal of the American Bar Association and that of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He was a member of the Académie Diplomatique Internationale, the American Philosophical Society, the American Law Institute and the Franklin Institute. He was former chancellor of the Philadelphia Bar Association and former president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association.

In Philadelphia Lawyer, Pepper published his autobiography. His other books included The Borderland of Federal and State Decisions (published when he was twenty-two), The Way, A Voice from the Crowd, Men and Issues, In the Senate, and Family Quarrels.

From his earliest days, he was associated with St. Mark's Episcopal Church in Philadelphia. Here he was baptized and married; he became a vestryman during his younger days; later Accounting Warden and Rector's Warden and, finally, Warden Emeritus. The Church's memorial to him declared that "his generous giving of money and time and counsel over this long period was influential beyond description in the molding of the character of the Parish of St. Mark's and the preservation of its heritage."

He had been a Centurion since 1936.

Edward W. Pinkham

Dr. Pinkham, helping to maintain the Century's tradition for longevity, had outlived most of his contemporaries when he died at the age of ninety. He had lived for twenty years in Sarasota, Florida. As the Club received no notification of his death, his memorial was not included with those of 1960. His name was seen, however, on the peg-in board in the front hall, by someone who knew of his death; your Historian now enters his memorial.

Edward Pinkham was educated at Harvard College from which he graduated in 1892 and took his doctor's degree at the Harvard Medical School in 1895. He was a specialist in gynecology and was professor of that subject at Post Graduate (now University) Hospital. He was attending surgeon at Woman's and City Hospitals. From 1925 to 1934, he was attending physician at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

He had a remarkable war record. In the Spanish-American War he was a first lieutenant and assistant surgeon. In the Philippines, he was awarded two Silver Stars for gallantry in action. Although he retired in 1934, he again served in the Second World War, holding the rank of colonel in the Army Medical Corps. He was in charge of a hospital center at Joué-les-tours, France.

In time off from his exigent work, he was a great golf enthusiast; in the evenings, poker was a means of relaxation. He had three dominating passions: Harvard College, Harvard Medical School, and the Army. His sons, however, were mavericks—one went to Yale, the other chose the Navy.

He was a devoted Centurion and in the years he spent in New York, was often at the Club. He was a member for forty-nine years—more than half his life.

Abram Poole

The word “artist” is often loosely used even by those who should know better. It is applied to anyone who performs with a brush on canvas or is adroit with clay. Rarely, the honor is given to an author, a musical composer, or an actor; then the title is felt to be a real honor, not merely professional label. Even the august founders of the Century said the Association should be composed (in addition to amateurs) of “authors [and] artists” as if never the twain should meet.

Against this linguistic background the remark of a fellow Centurion that Abram Poole was “more than a mere painter: he was an artist” stands out conspicuously. Centurions remember Poole’s last one-man show in our gallery in 1959, and painters among them know that it represented the culmination of a long, distinguished career.

Poole’s work is internationally known. In addition to the Metropolitan in New York, the Chicago Art Institute and the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh, he has exhibited at the Royal Academy in Munich and the Paris Salon. He has been awarded the Corcoran medal, Washington; the Lippincott Prize, Philadelphia, and the Altman Prize of the National Academy twice—in 1938 and 1940.

Born in 1882 in Chicago, Abram Poole graduated from Princeton in 1904 and then studied for some seven years at Munich's Royal Academy. In Paris, from 1912 to 1915, he was a pupil of Lucien Simon.

In the First World War, he was a captain of infantry and was assigned as regimental adjutant to the 343rd Infantry.

He was a member of the art department of the National Institute of Arts and Letters and an associate member of the National Academy of Design. He belonged also to the New Society of Painters. In 1931, he was on the jury on painting that chose Prix de Rome awards.

He was a Centurion for thirty-five years.

Frederick Pope

One of the fruits of victory in the First World War that passed to the United States was the German chemical patents acquired as part of the reparations. Until then, the patents had been closely held in Germany. They were not licensed to American manufacturers as the Germans were anxious to keep a virtual monopoly of the chemical industry at home. Until after the peace treaty, then, there was nothing that could rightly be called a chemical industry in the United States and few of the specialists who are now called chemical engineers.

There were Americans, however, who were well equipped to take over the problems of chemical engineering presented by the German patents—particularly those concerned with synthetic production. Standing out from the rest was Frederick Pope.

Even at the start of the war, Pope, who had been a mining engineer working in Africa as well as in the United States, had established the first American dye plant. Such industry was vital if the United States was to enter the war as the connection between dyes and explosives was close. Pope was also consulting engineer for the Newport Chemical Works from 1915 to 1917. When the United States entered the war, he joined the Army's engineer corps and became assistant chief of the Chemical Warfare Service. All this was excellent preparation for a successful career as chemical engineer.

Immediately after the war, he became an expert in the production of synthetic ammonia. He organized plants for this purpose in Russia, China, Japan, and India as well as in America. The Nitrogen Engineering Corporation which he helped establish built ammonia plants abroad.

Frederick Pope was born eighty-three years ago and in 1901 took a Bachelor of Science degree at Harvard's Lawrence Scientific School. On graduating, he entered the steel business, then began his work as mining engineer. Later he became a director of the American Cyanamid Corporation.

Arthur Wyman Procter

Like a celebrated Centurion, the late Arthur Train, Arthur Procter was a lawyer with a flair for mystery stories. Murder in Manhattan, published in 1930 followed two of what publishers call "serious books": Principles of Public Personnel Administration and Financing of Social Work, in which latter he collaborated with Arthur Aloys Schuck, the international Boy Scout executive. In 1927, he collaborated in the play Savages Under the Skin. He was also an amateur historian of the American West and edited the Covered Wagon Centennial and Ox-Team Days in 1931. He was also a trustee of the American Pioneer Trails Association and secretary-treasurer of the Oregon Trail Memorial Association.

Procter was admitted to the New York Bar in 1921 after graduating from Columbia. He became a senior partner of the law firm of Procter, Bowers, Harding and Smith.

He was a man of varied interests, but his main ones were in humane organizations or in those devoted to aiding fellow humans. He was president of Midtown Hospital, director of the Greater New York Council of the Boy Scouts of America, and of the Travelers Aid Association. He was chairman of the New York State Americanism Commission of the American Legion and judge advocate of the New York Chapter of the Military Order of the World War.

In later years, Arthur Procter was at the Century almost daily, especially at the noon hour. He looked younger than his years; he seemed so vigorous and in such good health that the habitués of the Round Table could scarcely believe it when they heard of his death.

David Allan Robertson

When undergraduates of the University of Chicago fifty years ago were summoned into the presence of the president, they cushioned the anticipated shock by going first to the president's secretary, David Robertson. For faculty members, too, he was a buffer. "A slender, delicately formed, soft-spoken young man," remembers a Centurion who was once his student, "he managed, in an informal unobtrusive way, to soften and ease contacts that might otherwise be bristling and bruising." When, at last, he himself became a college president, he took these talents with him and, accordingly, became more accessible and friendly than most such dignitaries.

Another Centurion who knew him later, writes:

"David Robertson was a quiet person who did not unbosom himself easily to casual acquaintances. But when a friend was accepted he was accepted fully. He was the kind of man who is welcome in a small gathering, listening to the views of others, pondering them, letting the enthusiasts and the voluble boys talk, and finally delivering himself of an opinion of value. Such an opinion might be spiced either with humor or with literary allusions, for he had both a sense of humor and a vast knowledge of literature. Which quality is more important to the Club may be debatable, but he had both."

David Robertson was born in Chicago, went to school there and graduated from the University in 1902. He studied English in its graduate school with special attention to Shakespeare and the Elizabethan drama. Soon, however, he became involved in administrative work and, from 1906 to 1920, was secretary to President Judson. From 1920 to 1923, he was dean of the colleges of arts, literature, and science. In 1930, he became President of Goucher College for Women in Baltimore.

This was, we remember, the threshold of the Depression and so, a difficult time for the college as it was for colleges everywhere. Enrollment was falling off and income was inadequate. With Robertson's complete reorganization of the college, both educationally and physically it emerged from the critical years with renewed strength. Under his direction, the campus was moved from its crowded city area to the suburbs. A friend remembers that the move began as Hitler invaded Poland—a tribute to Robertson's refusal to be diverted from his purposes by world upheaval.

Robertson's familiarity with the world literary scene was not derived merely from books. He traveled widely, visited some fifty foreign universities, and knew and talked with many contemporary authors. He was a friend of Yeats and "AE," corresponded with Hardy about The Dynasts, and with Shaw about Americanisms used by William Archer; he had a hand in the exposure of the spurious "1619" Shakespeare quartos and knew many of the men responsible for the developments in Shakesperean studies, and he talked with W. A. Craigie about Scottish literature.

Robertson was at one time assistant director of the American Council on Education; at another, he prepared the first edition of American Universities and Colleges which soon became a standard work.

He was an amateur painter and made several contributions to the Century's amateur shows. These included portraits and landscapes, the subjects of which were both American and European. He was greatly interested in the exhibitions and although a non-resident member, often came to them.

Henry Morton Robinson

"Rondo" Robinson, as his friends called him, because of his fondness for the rondeau form in French verse, is remembered by teachers and students of Columbia with a combination of respect, affection, and amusement. He had a charm in talking that was aided by an odd hesitation in his speech which, remembers a friend, "led him occasionally to split a word in half, tacking each part to the word that preceded or followed." He could be uproariously funny, but, too, there was a kind of pathos in his unassuming appraisal of himself and his work. As a young man, he is described as an incorrigible romantic "intoxicated by love and poetry."

The memory of his own undergraduate career at Columbia was constantly with him while he taught there, and this was a bond with his pupils. He had taken part in many extra-curricular activities—mostly in the literary and dramatic realms; he had edited two of the college papers and had been a member of Boar's Head, the poetry society, for even then poetry was the focus of his interest. Then his epic poem, sometimes called a novel in verse The Children of Morningside attached him to the whole Columbia community, an attachment he never lost.

Henry Morton Robinson was born in Boston, one of twelve children, in 1898. His entrance to Columbia was delayed by service in the Navy in the First World War on submarine chasers and as a rifle instructor. He entered college in 1919, took his bachelor's degree in 1923, and his master's the following year. He was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and won the Moncrieff Proudfit Fellowship for Letters which kept him at Columbia. In 1924, he won the James S. O'Neal Poetry Prize for his thesis on the war poet Alan Seeger. He was then made an instructor in the English Department. After a few years of teaching, he devoted himself entirely to writing, both verse and prose.

Children of Morningside was followed by Buck Fever, a volume of narrative and lyric poems and then Stout Cortez and Private Virtue, Public Good. His Fantastic Interim, a history of the decade of the 'twenties was, he thought, his best book of non-fiction. He began writing novels in 1945.

Those most familiar with his work find a paradox between his fiction which they think old-fashioned in substance and method and his keen interest in Joyce. With Joseph Campbell, a Sarah Lawrence professor, he collaborated on a work entitled A Skeleton Key to Finnegans Wake, the Joyce book which, when it was published, was thought extremely avant garde.

His most successful novel was The Cardinal, published in 1950. This attained the top of the best-seller list and sold, in various editions, including paperback reprints, well over a million copies. His other novels were The Perfect Round, The Great Snow, The Enchanted Grindstone and Water of Life—also a best-seller. For ten years after 1935, he was on the editorial staff of Reader's Digest.

Rondo died as the result of a tragic accident. He was scalded in a bathtub and never recovered from the complications caused by second- and third-degree burns.

Henry Upson Sims

"The English hymns of the eighteenth century, especially those written in the first half of the eighteenth century are the simplest, the most inspiring, and therefore the best English hymns. . . . But surprisingly few hymns of outstanding quality have been composed within the last hundred years."

So wrote Henry Sims in the introduction to the valuable little book he edited in 1949, 150 Great Hymns in the English Language. But the book is not merely a collection, in which we may all find old favorites, it is a critical analysis of a sort rarely attempted of the sacred songs with a keen eye to literary values. Each is preceded by a biographical sketch of its author so that Sims has produced a kind of reference book for many major English poets. Unfortunately for the general public the book was privately published; luckily for us, Sims gave a copy to the Century library.

Henry Sims was not, as might be guessed from his work, a clergyman. He was a distinguished lawyer, once president of the American Bar Association. He did not, however, always approve of measures proposed by the Association. The year before his death, he was one of twenty-five lawyers who protested a proposal that all American lawyers be required to take loyalty oaths in which they should swear to anti-Communist convictions. The lawyers objected to anything which violated the "American tradition that suspicion of disloyalty shall not be cast upon an entire class or profession upon the chance of catching a few random delinquents."

Henry Sims graduated from the University of Virginia in 1894 and from the Harvard Law School three years later. For the next fifty years, he practiced law in Birmingham, Alabama.

He was at one time chairman of the central committee of the American Red Cross, director of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, and president of the Birmingham and Alabama Bar Associations. He was also a former administrative chairman of the Birmingham Legal Advisory Board. He was a Centurion for nearly a third of his long life of eighty-eight years.

James Kellum Smith

Perhaps no Centurion has ever done more for the Century than Jim Smith. He served on every committee and, today, every committee bears the mark of his service: each is better for it. He was elected second vice-president and then first vice-president—an office that terrified him lest he should one day have to preside at a meeting. He had presided at many meetings in his time—as president, for example, of the American Academy in Rome—but the Century was different. He was forever humble before it, and all the affection and admiration of countless Centurions could never convince him that he was worthy of the post he held.

Jim's modesty prevented many of us from knowing of his immense influence upon our Association. Quietly, in little unofficial meetings, he would make a suggestion, drop a half-humorous hint that would go through the always slow gestation of ideas into facts and become not merely a fact but a tradition. And Jim knew our Clubhouse as only an architect could; he knew where every picture hung, every bit of sculpture stood; he noted every broken chair, every malfunction of lighting, heating, air-conditioning, or plumbing and, within a budget that some treasurer had made flexible, he kept everything in order.

He was, of course, steeped in the Century's architectural lore. He was a partner in the firm of McKim, Mead and White which, in the 1890s, designed our Clubhouse, and with Larry White, son of Stanford White, chief designer, he supervised what changes were made—keeping them gradual lest they shock our elder statesmen. When, after it had run a long gauntlet of attack from conservatives, Larry pushed through the Loggia, Jim was greatly concerned to keep it democratic—afraid that it would house a circular clique of the élite, a concept that he always fought.

"Integrity" is an overworked word; its original meaning can perhaps best be rendered as "all of a piece." Jim had no separate parts. His sure taste, his creative talent, his friendship, his loyalties, and his generosity were completely integrated as the qualities in every facet of the buildings he designed were absorbed into the finished whole. His structures were not merely complete in themselves; they were integral with the sites on which they stood, with the landscapes about them, as well as with their purposes. He had a singular capacity for seeing everything at once; in his life there was never an instant of myopia.

James Kellum Smith (often called Jay Kay) was born in Towanda, Pennsylvania—a small town on which he never turned his back. He went to public schools there—then to Amherst from which he graduated in 1915. Four years later, he was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania School of Architecture. In 1920, he won the Prix de Rome in architecture, and in the next three years as a Fellow of the American Academy in Rome, he established one of his lifelong dedications. Later he became a trustee of the Academy and was its president for more than twenty years. After that he was its honorary president.

His architectural practice was mainly concerned with institutional buildings. At Amherst, he designed the Kirby Theatre, the gymnasium, the Mead Art Building, Chapin Hall, and Alumni House. In all these he kept to the style of the college's century-old original buildings: red brick with white trim in the Greek revival mode. Having become expert in the adaptation of college buildings to their campuses, he designed them for Bowdoin, Middlebury, Trinity, and Union Colleges, and for the universities of Colgate, Tufts, Wesleyan, Washington, Connecticut, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and Vermont. He designed, also, the United States Military Cemetery at Florence. His most recent work was the Museum of History and Technology, now being built for the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

In the First World War, he was an aviator; in the Second, a lieutenant colonel in the Army Air Force. In the Second World War he dealt with the strategic problem of the profitable employment of the Air Force on the Western Front. Studies he made in 1944–45 for the Air Subcommittees of the Joint Intelligence Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff led to the acceleration of the Allied offensive in France—a necessity if we were to win the race with the fast-developing German jet fighter.

At the same time that he was doing this exigent job, he took measures to protect the Academy in Rome. At war's end, he led the Academy back into the stream of life and gave it a new heart and sense of mission.

In all his work, Jim had a gentle insistence that nearly always won out for his ideas and ideals. Basically he was uncompromising, however flexible he might appear. He convinced his opponents without their knowing that they had been convinced; he had a way of making people feel that they had been with him all the time.

Jim's image will never fade from the memories of those who knew him well. To them the warm scenes at the Club after monthly meetings when Jim was on the "closing committee," telling stories, laughing with us, enjoying only the best of drinks as he always enjoyed the best of food and wine, will always be vivid and immediate. Late in the evening he would send for a volume of Kipling and quietly sing "Gentlemen Rankers," closely following the words he could never memorize in the book.

Friends who were lucky enough to visit his Pennsylvania farm were aware not only of his gourmet tastes but of his excellence as a cook. His dishes were often tricky in the making, but exciting to eat. He knew, too, a good bit about truck farming and, especially, viticulture.

Well, Jim is gone, but he is not gone. He haunts us happily in our Century. He is in every room, always gay, as he was even in those last suffering days, as he stood on the very threshold of death.

The awareness of his gift to us will grow with the years; so will our gratitude.

Thank you, Jim!

Seth Talcott

Seth died in France as perhaps he would have wished, having given her so much of his life. In spite of a chronic limp, the result of an accident in boarding school, he was active in the First World War. The unevenness of his legs kept him out of the armed forces, but he went to France with one of the Yale ambulance units and served with the French Army for fifteen months. In November 1918, he was decorated with the Croix de guerre for his conduct during operations near Soissons in May and June of that year and in Champagne in October.

After graduating with the class of 1919 at Yale, he studied architecture briefly at the University of Pennsylvania Art School; then he went back to France. He was one of the last Americans to complete the rigorous four-year course at the Ecole des Beaux Arts from which he graduated as an Architecte Diplômé par le Gouvernement in 1927. He was fortunate, at the school, in joining the group studying under the remarkable critic, Emmanuel Pontremoli.

"A very special bond developed among his students," writes one of them, also a Centurion, "associated together as we were in work, in joint efforts and in respect for our revered patron. This bond persists, uniting all his former students of whatever origin."

In 1928, he formed a partnership, Talcott and Talcott, with his brother Charles and practiced architecture in New York until America's entrance into the Second World War. Then he served as a naval lieutenant in Washington. After the war, he took up his work again with his brother in Greenwich, Connecticut. In 1950, he established his own firm in Rhinecliff, New York.

In his profession, he was primarily concerned with private houses, and in the design of these he used the imagination and taste that were native to him. He was one of the first of his generation to understand and appreciate the so-called "modern" style.

A Centurion friend remembers happily a tour of the chateau country in France. Seth knew all kinds of wine growers with whom he had been associated in the war, and they stopped at many of their homes for luncheon. They ended the tour with a walking trip in the Pyrenees, which Seth insisted on making despite his bad leg.

When he was in New York, Seth often had lunch at the Century, and he was a fairly regular attendant at monthly meetings, where he greatly enjoyed the good food, good wine, and good company.

"Staunch friend" writes another colleague, "patient, durable and dogged, sociable too, he worked hard and enjoyed life keenly. He also relished discussion, particularly in the field of visual arts, which he loved to analyze, penetrating to the roots of problems in search of permanent values."

Joseph Cary Turner

It is said of Joe Turner that when, in the rare pauses in his medical work, he came to the Century he loved so well, he sought out the men who were not doctors. Among Centurions of other vocations, he had many friends. His wit delighted any group in which he sat, and his gusty laughter resounding through the room caught many a stranger who was infected by it into a gay mood.

In his work Turner was distinguished by great energy and stamina under a burden of jobs that would have defeated most of his fellow-physicians. At one time he was consulting hematologist to Columbia Medical Center, director of its clinical laboratories, in sole charge of the major undergraduate course—second year Clinical Pathology—carried on an uninterrupted program of laboratory investigation, and, parallel with all these activities, maintained a private practice.

Research was his first love. As a resident in Boston, he made investigations into the phenomena of Hodgkin's disease, which attracted wide attention and turned him toward hematology. He also devoted much time in later years to laboratory experiments in a variety of subjects including virology, cancer, biochemistry, and the biology of the cell.

Joseph Turner was born in New York City in 1909, took his A.B. at Columbia, and his doctorate at the College of Physicians and Surgeons. After his graduation, he was intern for two years in Presbyterian Hospital, then resident on the Harvard service of the Boston City Hospital, and returned for another term of residency at Presbyterian. After this, his career was devoted mainly to academic medicine at Presbyterian. He was made a full professor in 1958.

In the Second World War, he served overseas in the Army Medical Corps. In the European Theatre of Operations, he was Chief of the Laboratory Section of the Second General Hospital; then as Chief of Medicine at two station hospitals and consultant to a hospital group. In the midst of this active work, he discovered a new phenomenon in primary atypical pneumonia and, incidentally, published four papers in Nature, the British Journal of Experimental Pathology and the Lancet. At war's end he made a study of sickle cell disease in Liberia.

Men of Turner's original mind and creative imagination are much needed in medical research. It is a pity that with his experience and immense promise of future achievement, he should have died in his fifty-second year. For thirteen of his years, he was a Centurion.

Charles Kingsley Webster

"Like a big shaggy dog," wrote Dr. Arnold Toynbee in the Chatham House Journal International Affairs, "who hardly knows how to work off his overflowing energy, this exuberant professor would growl and bark and sometimes even bite; but if the tooth marks did occasionally break the skin, they left no poison behind. . . ."

On the contrary, many of those at whom Sir Charles aimed his ferocious "mock attacks" became his admirers and his fast friends. The combination of extreme conscientiousness with an immense potential for the enjoyment of life which characterized him inspired this admiring affection. The sociability, the generosity of time and energy which always accompanied his most strenuous work, maintained it.

As Dr. Toynbee expressed it he drove a troika of research, teaching, and university administration. Chatham House was his starting point. From its Foreign Research and Press Service, Webster proceeded to prenatal work on the United Nations, helping to draft the British part of the U.N. Charter. Then he saw the U.N.'s birth through at San Francisco.

As a boy, Sir Charles attended the Merchant Taylors' School at Crosby, Lancashire, and went on to King's College in Cambridge. His work in the United States began with four years as Professor of History at Harvard. In the Second World War, he directed the British Library of Information in New York. It was in this time that he became a Centurion; he enjoyed our Association, and we enjoyed him. His genial smile was infectious, and it was difficult to see him without speaking to him.

In 1944, he served with the British delegation to the Dumbarton Oaks Conference. Meanwhile, he had done substantial professional work at Liverpool, Abarysmith, and London. Soon after the end of the Second World War, he was made a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Four years later, his distinction in historical and antiquarian studies won him the presidency of the British Academy.

His publications included The Congress of Vienna, 1814-1815; British Diplomacy, 1813-1815; The Foreign Policy of Castlereagh, 1812-1815; and the two-volume work Britain and the Independence of Latin America.

It is a pity that the wide international activities of Sir

Charles kept him from the Century, because he was what the late Centurion Geoffrey Parsons called a "born Centurion."

Harold Eaton Wood

A tragic automobile accident for which he was in no way responsible took the life of Harold Wood on a highway in his own state and deprived his home community of one of its leaders. St. Paul, Minnesota, was the beneficiary of his important civic contributions, and this is a long way from Forty-third Street. Unfortunately, as a fellow St. Paulist—also a Centurion—writes "He had very little opportunity to turn up at the Club on the occasions when he spent a day or two in New York crammed with business engagements, and his enthusiastic interest in the theatre usually had a prior claim on his evenings. I have always considered that his scarcity at the Centurion was a privation both for him and for other members of the Club because he was a first class conversationalist of wide intellectual and artistic interests and [Centurion] Ogden Nash would have described him as someone whom it was fun to be with."

Wood was especially interested in charitable organizations. Three times he served as chairman of St. Paul Community Chest drives. He was a trustee of the Greater University of Minnesota Corporation, St. Paul Foundation and Amherst H. Wilder Foundation. He was founder of the Harold E. Wood Investment Securities Company.
